Dispatches from Secretary Stanton—Late Intelligence from Gen. Sherman—Fighting going on at Kenesaw—The Rebel Gen. Polk Killed—The Disaster to Gen. Sturgis and the Means Taken to Repair it.

[OFFICIAL.]

WASHINGTON, June 15—7 A. M.

To Major-Gen. Dix:

The movement of the Army of the Potomac to the south side of Richmond, across the Chickahominy River and James River, has progressed far enough to admit the publication of some general facts, without danger of premature disclosure.

After several days' preliminary preparations, the movement commenced on Sunday night. The Eighteenth Army Corps, under command of Gen. SMITH, marched to White House and there embarked on transports for Bermuda Landing. Gen. WRIGHT'S corps and BURNSIDE'S moved to James Bridge, where they crossed the Chickahominy and marched thence to Charles City, on the James River. Gens. HANCOCK'S and WARREN'S corps crossed the Chickahominy at Long Bridge, and marched thence to Wilcox's, on the James River.

The James River was to be crossed by the army at Powhattan Point. A dispatch from Gen. GRANT dated Monday evening at 5½ o'clock, headquarters Wilcox's Landing, states that the advance of our troops had reached that place, and would commence crossing the James River to-morrow, (Tuesday,) and SMITH'S corps would commence arriving at City Point that night; that no fighting was reported during the movement except a little cavalry skirmishing. Yesterday (Tuesday) afternoon, at 1 o'clock P. M., Gen. GRANT was at Bermuda Landing. In a dispatch from him, dated at 3 o'clock that day, he says: "Our forces will commence crossing James River to-day. The enemy show no signs of yet having brought troops to the south side of Richmond. Our movement from Cold Harbor to the James River has been made with great celerity, and so far without loss or accident." An unofficial dispatch, dated at Gen. BUTLER'S headquarters, 2:20 P. M., says that SMITH'S corps was coming on, five thousand having already landed.

A dispatch from Gen. SHERMAN'S headquarters, dated at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon, near Kenesaw, states that the General is in front, advancing his lines on Kenesaw. Another unofficial dispatch, dated at 9 o'clock last night, reports some advance to-day; that Gen. THOMAS has gained ground, and that one rebel brigade is nearly surrounded. It further reports that the rebel Gen. POLK was killed to-day, and his body sent to Marietta. In another part of Gen. SHERMAN'S East Mississippi Division our forces have not met with the success that has attended competent Commanders.

Gen. WASHBURN, at Memphis, reports that the expedition, consisting of 3,000 cavalry, 5,000 infantry, and 16 pieces of artillery, sent out from there a few days ago under command of Gen. STURGIS, encountered a large rebel force on the 10th inst. under command of FORREST, at Guntown, on the railroad running south from Corinth, and, after a severe fight, in which our loss in killed and wounded was heavy, our forces were worsted; that at last accounts STURGIS was at Collinsville retreating toward Memphis.

Dispatches state that, with the troops that had lately arrived, Memphis is safe.

Gen. SHERMAN, having received the news of STURGIS' defeat, reports that he has already made arrangements to repair STURGIS' disaster, and placed Gen. A. J. SMITH in command, who will assume the offensive immediately.

No other military intelligence has been received by this department since my last telegram.

EDWIN M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

REPORTS FROM FORTRESS MONROE.

FORTRESS MONROE, Tuesday, June 14,
via BALTIMORE, Wednesday, June 15.

There is great activity prevailing in this department.

The Eighteenth Army Corps passed here last night on transports, from the White House for Bermuda Hundred. About —— other troops had gone to that point previously.

Troops are rapidly disembarking at Bermuda Landing.

A number of other transports with troops, supposed from Washington, have passed here for the same destination.

Stirring news may be expected soon.

It is learned that a portion of Gen. GRANT'S army is at Charles City, on the James River.

Gen. BUTLER has been actively engaged for several days past superintending the preparations for the movement of the army across the James River, by laying pontoons, &c.

From Fortress Monroe.

FORTRESS MONROE, Tuesday, June 14.

There has been no arrival from Bermuda Hundred up to the closing of the mail this evening.

Lieut. JOHN J. PHILLIPS, of the Fifth Pennsylvania Cavalry, died yesterday, at the Chesapeake Hospital.

The United States steamer Gettysburgh, Capt. LAMSON, has arrived from off Wilmington, where she left on a cruise. But she picked up a Government schooner, (the Mary Steadman,) in distress, and towed her into Hampton Roads. The crew were all well.

GEN. SHERMAN'S ARMY.

The Rebel Army Reported South of the Chattahoochee—The River Swollen by the Recent Rains—Wheeler's Attempt to Obstruct the Railroad—A Train Blown Up by a Torpedo.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Tuesday, June 14.

An officer just arrived from the front reports that on Friday last the rebel Gen. WHEELER, with a large force of cavalry, appeared at Calhoun, on the railroad between Chattanooga and our army.

WHEELER'S forces seized six cars laden with grain, and cut the telegraph wires.

The train coming north was notified at Adairsville, and stopped. Gen. A. P. HOVEY was aboard, and collected some two hundred convalescents, formed them in line of battle, and moved cautiously on.

On the arrival of the train at Calhoun it was found that the rebels had retreated from the town.

The train then moved with its usual speed toward Resaca, but when about half way there an enormous torpedo exploded, hurling the locomotive six feet from the track, and tearing four cars, that were immediately in the rear, into splinters. Fortunately, the troops were in the last car of all, and escaped injury.

The box containing the missile was marked "powder, C. S. A., 25 pounds."

Nobody was seriously injured. Capt. BARLOW, of Gen. LOGAN'S staff, was bruised.

The train passed on in the evening to Resaca.

The same night WHEELER again appeared on the road below Calhoun and tore up a considerable portion of the track, which has since been repaired, and trains are again running.

The gentleman, who left the front of our army on the 9th inst., says that our cavalry, on a reconnoissance to the front, found only a light force of rebel cavalry, which, after a severe skirmish, fell back and crossed the Chattahoochee River.

The river is much swollen by heavy rains, and no serious movement can occur until the river falls.

THE UNION CAMPAIGN.

GREAT MEETING LAST EVENING.

Enthusiastic Indorsement of Lincoln and Johnson.

Cooper Institute Crowded to Overflowing.

THE GOOD OMEN FOR NOVEMBER.

Speeches of Messrs. C. S. Spencer and Henry J. Raymond; Ex-Gov. Wright, of Indiana; Hon. Horace Maynard, of Tennessee, and Hon. S. Matthews, of Maryland.

Last evening one of the largest, most earnest and enthusiastic audiences ever assembled at Cooper Institute, gathered there, filling it to and beyond its capacity, to respond to and ratify the nomination of ABRAHAM LINCOLN and ANDREW JOHNSON for President and Vice-President, for four years from the 4th of March next. All classes of citizens, all parties were represented, and all united in a glad and enthusiastic recognition of the patriotic services, the stern integrity, and the tried ability of President LINCOLN, and in warmest approval of the selection as his coadjutor of the tested and trusty patriot, ANDREW JOHNSON. The opening of the campaign, in this meeting, indicates the Union success. It foreshadowed the uprising of men, the length and breadth of the country, undirected by party leaders, untrammeled by party feeling and prejudices, devoted solely to the safety of their country, the cause of the Union. Never has there been so unmistakable a demonstration. It was almost impromptu, too, for but brief notice had been given of the meeting to the loyal thousands assembled. A large number of ladies by their presence lent encouraging approval to the objects of the meeting.

Over the platform a banner was suspended containing the nominations, below on either side of which the Stars and Stripes were tastefully displayed.

During the evening the proceedings were enlivened by the music of a band.

At 8 o'clock, Hon. CHARLES S. SPENCER, President of the Lincoln and Johnson Campaign Club, under the auspices of which the meeting was called, called the meeting to order.

Mr. SPENCER said:

REMARKS OF HON. C. S. SPENCER.

In fulfillment of the promise made in this hall on the evening of the 13th of May last, this club meets to-night to ratify the nomination it then advocated. With an enthusiastic unanimity, the National Union Convention has presented to the loyal people of the country for reelection to the Presidency, honest, faithful, capable ABRAHAM LINCOLN; and from suffering Tennessee comes our candidate for the Vice-Presidency, fearless, loyal ANDY JOHNSON. To the election of this ticket this club pledges its utmost efforts. We do not propose to ignore the organization to which we are attached—to inaugurate a revolt against an Administration of our own choosing, or by raising the standard of secession in our own ranks to afford aid and comfort to the enemy. We have no disappointed ambition to madden—no personal revenges to gratify. As the President has stood, in its hour of trial, by the country, so stand we by the President. With joy and faith we look from the perilous present to a glorious future, and see beyond the ensanguined field of battle a brighter picture. The rebellion subdued—its leaders executed, or in banishment—the Union restored—the imported Mexican Emperor and his French army driven from this continent—every slave shackle broken—the Atlantic and Pacific connected by a railroad over whose track "Westward the Star of Empire takes its way"—the heroic soldiers and the gallant sailors victors on the land and on the sea, in the enjoyment of material and deserved reward—and over a happy, grateful, prosperous, free people!

ABRAHAM LINCOLN, President,
ANDREW JOHNSON, Vice-President.

JOHN M. COSTAR, Esq., then put in nomination the following list of Vice Presidents and Secretaries, which was adopted:

WASHINGTON, June 10, 1864.

Charles S. Spencer, Esq., New-York:

DEAR SIR: Your invitation to the Ratification meeting is received. I did not fail to come up in time to the support of the candidates of Union and freedom in 1848, 1852, 1856 and 1860. I shall not fail to come up in time, if wanted, in 1864. But it is not now certain that I shall be wanted at all, and I am sure that I am not wanted yet. So far as an expression of my concurrence in the nominations and platform is concerned, everybody knows that, substantially, I was committed in detail to all that the convention has now done, long before a delegate was chosen, and even long before the convention itself was called. The secret of the success of the convention is, that the American people are a wise, wise and liberty-loving and humane nation, and, being such, it could, under the existing circumstances, do nothing, and say nothing, more or less, than just what the convention has now spoken in its name, and has recommended shall be done. For the present let the people send men and supplies to the National armies in the field, and thus enable them "to fight it out on the same lines if it takes all Summer." The election of LINCOLN and JOHNSON, at the close of a successful campaign, will then speak the people's decision, that Slavery has perished and that the American Union is invincible.

I am, Sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

Mr. SMITH read the following resolutions, which were adopted unanimously:

Resolved, That this assemblage, representing the manifest sentiment of the Unionists of New-York, heartily ratify the action of the convention recently held at Baltimore.

Resolved, That to the doctrines declared by that convention we respond with cordial approval; and we rejoice that the day has at length come when policy is tested by principle—when patriotism is allied to humanity—when the interests of one race seek vindication through justice to another—when Free Labor may assail the Slave Trade not only in far off territories and still

RUMORS ABOUT THE CONFERENCE.

FINANCIAL AND COMMERCIAL.

The Royal mail steamship Scotia, Capt. JUDKINS, which left Liverpool at 9:30 on the morning of the 4th and Queenstown on the evening of the 5th June, arrived here yesterday afternoon. Her news is two days later than that received by the Belgian, off Cape Race.

The Inman steamer City of Washington, Capt. BROOKS, which left Liverpool at 4 o'clock on the afternoon of the 1st, and Queenstown on the 2d of June, also arrived here yesterday afternoon.

The Cunard screw-steamer Olympus, Capt. McMICKEN, which left Liverpool at 3 o'clock P. M. on the 21st ult., and Queenstown on the afternoon of the 1st inst., arrived here yesterday morning.

The City of Cork arrived off Cape Clear at 7 o'clock on the morning of the 1st of June.

The steamer North American, from Quebec, arrived at Queenstown, short of coals, on the afternoon of the 2d of June, and reached Liverpool on the evening of the 3d.

The Hansa reached Southampton on the evening of the 3d.

The City of Manchester was off Cape Clear at 6 A. M. on the 4th.

A report had been current that arrangements were in progress for an amalgamation of the "Liverpool, New-York and Philadelphia Steamship Company" (Inman line) and the "National Steam Navigation Company"—but both companies publish an emphatic denial, and announce the report without the slightest foundation in fact.

AMERICAN TOPICS.

THE CONFEDERATES IN FRANCE.

The Paris correspondent of the Morning Post, writing on May 27, says:

"It will be remembered that representations were made some time since by Mr. DAYTON, the United States Minister at Paris, concerning the building of vessels of war supposed to be ordered by agents of the Confederate States. M. DROUYN DE LHUYS received, at the time these representations with courtesy, and repeated that the Imperial Government of France desired in this, as in all other matters, to observe and maintain the strictest neutrality; if the vessels were proved to be building for the South, the law should take its course. Since this first indication made to the French Foreign Office, the official agents of the North in Paris have collected an amount of evidence which has been submitted to M. BERRYER, who has studied the case and given his legal opinion thereon. The case opens by quoting the official declaration of neutrality made in June, 1861, viz.: that France would observe during the American war the strictest neutrality. The articles of this neutrality declaration are quoted, prohibiting any Frenchman from building vessels-of-war, arming vessels, or disposing of munitions of war to either party. This is the basis of M. BERRYER's pleading, since it has now been proved by correspondence, including that of the banking transactions of the house of ERLANGER that Capt. BULLOCH and Mr. SLIDELL, acting as agents for the Southern Government, ordered and caused to be built by M. ARMAN, at Bordeaux and Nantes, four vessels-of-war of 400 horse-power, armed with twelve or fourteen guns each. M. ARMAN in due time applied for Government permission to arm the vessels, stating that they were for an "amateur voyageur," who would employ them in the seas of China, Japan, San Francisco, &c. The Minister of Marine accorded the permission on the above statement. Correspondence is here printed, showing how money was then paid through the Messrs. ERLANGER to M. ARMAN, and sufficient additional proof fell into the hands of the United States agents in Paris to show that the vessels building were ships-of-war belonging to the Government of the Southern States. Such proofs having been forwarded to the French Government by Mr. DAYTON, the United States Minister at Paris, orders were given that the vessels in question should not be permitted to leave the ports where they are building. The object in consulting M. BERRYER, and publishing his opinion, seems to be that of showing how the Southern agents have violated the laws of France, and probably with a view of instituting legal proceedings against them. M. BERRYER, in giving his opinion, appears to prove very clearly that an illegal and punishable act has been committed. The French law on this subject appears to be much clearer than the English law. I do not hear that Mr. DAYTON has, in the name of the United States Government, demanded the seizure of these vessels, but they are not able to leave France, and will probably be disposed of eventually according to the decisions of the law."

THE RAMS IN THE MERSEY—STATEMENT OF THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL REGARDING THEIR PURCHASE.

In the House of Commons May 30, in reply to questions by Mr. HENNESSY, the Attorney-General said:

"In answer to the questions of the honorable gentleman, it will be necessary for me to make a short statement to the House. The House is probably aware that in the month of September, some time before the seizure of these vessels, the Government applied to the persons representing themselves to be the owners of those ships, expressing their willingness, if they were really in the hands of bona fide owners, to treat for the purchase of them. At that time the overture so made by the Government was entirely ineffectual, and the seizure afterwards took place. No overture was subsequently made by the Government, but, on the other hand, an offer was made to the Government some time ago, offering the ships in question to the Government at a price named, which in the opinion of the Government did not represent their fair value, but was, in fact, a much higher price. That overture was simply and absolutely declined, and no further communications were made having any tendency to lead to an arrangement. The same party, and I may mention his name—Mr. BRAVAY—afterward renewed the application in another form. He stated that he was desirous of knowing whether there were any pecuniary terms which the Government, on their part, would be willing to offer by means of which the matter might be brought to an end, it being understood that no admission was to be asked from the one party to the effect that a violation of the law had been committed, or from the other in the contrary sense. Upon that the Admiralty, by the assistance they were able to command, ascertained what, in their opinion would be the fair value of the vessels. They named that value, stating that they were prepared, for the reasons assigned, to put an end to the matter on the terms of paying the fair value of the vessels, but not on the terms of paying any other or greater price. That value was very much less than the sum named, and very much less than the parties stated they would be able to obtain from any other purchasers they could command. They accordingly closed with the offer made by the Government. The honorable gentleman further asks whether the inducement to the Crown to make such arrangement was a doubt as to the construction and application of the provisions of the Foreign Enlistment Act with regard to the equipping and arming of vessels. In answer to that question, I may say that the House is perfectly well able to judge what the doubts are which appertain to the subject; but I may, in reference to this particular case, add that doubts as to the construction of the act in regard to it had no considerable place in the motives which influenced the Crown to enter into the arrangement to which I have referred. The motives of the Crown were rather these—when the question before the courts was one of fact as well as of law, it would not have been in accordance with the experience of those acquainted with the uncertainty attending the administration of justice to assume with a too absolute confidence that the verdict, however strong the Crown might feel in the goodness of its case, would necessarily be in its favor, more particularly in a matter in which, to say the least of it, political feeling might exercise an influence on the result. The Crown could not, therefore, take it for granted that they would, as a matter of course, be successful, but I am, at the same time, bound to say that it was not any doubt in the mind of the law officers of the Crown that they had a good case in which they might hope to succeed that induced them on their side to enter into this arrangement. Besides the advantage to the public of securing those public objects for which, and not for the sake of inflicting any loss or forfeiture upon individuals, the seizures had been made, there considerations operated on the mind of the Crown. In the first place, there certainly had been prevailing great and considerable uncertainty in the public mind as to the extent to which a subject might go in the way of building or equipping ships for belligerents without infringing the law. It was well-known that before these seizures took place opinions had been given by which individuals might have been encouraged to believe that they were safe in acting on a view of the law contrary to that on which the Government might be advised to act. Consequently, there were grounds for believing that British subjects in this country had offended against the law under a bona fide impression that they were not doing so. Then the Crown had the case of the Pampero in Scotland in view, in which they had recently made arrangements upon the same—as I venture to think them—liberal principles. It had allowed the ship to remain in the hands of the owners, not insisting upon the forfeiture, but upon the terms that security should be given against its belligerent employment. In this particular case the ships are good ships, which it is worth the while of the nation to possess at their fair and legitimate value. At the same time it was felt that the possession of the ships by the nation would be more complete and satisfactory security against their employment for belligerent purposes than any other engagement into which it was possible to enter. Under these circumstances, the Crown, not caring to make money out of the transaction, or to inflict pecuniary loss on the individuals concerned, its law advisers thought they were at liberty to deal with the defendants in this as they had done in another case. Of course, these defendants throughout insisted, and still insist, that they were guilty of no violation of the law, and no arrangement was made with them which entitles any one to say that they were guilty of such violation. With regard to the next question, my answer is that no such condonation as that which it indicates was part of the terms of the arrangement. The Crown was not prosecuting for a misdemeanor; it was only proceeding against the ships. As regards the question of the claim for compensation for the seizure, I can only say that it is quite impossible that any such claim can be made on the footing on which the arrangement proceeded. I may add, in reply to the last question that I hope it will not be found necessary to propose any new legislation on the subject. The Government confidently trust that all parties will profit by what has taken place, and that there may be no occasion for further legislation or prosecutions; but, undoubtedly, the Government are as much prepared, and determined as ever to maintain the law as they understand, and still understand it to be, if any future infraction of it should be attempted. They do not, as I may observe, think that this arrangement will operate as a premium to shipbuilders to speculate in building vessels of war for belligerents, because the parties to the arrangement have represented, and the Government have no reason to doubt the bona fides of the representation, that if the ships were entirely under their control, they would be able to bring them to a more profitable market, and to obtain for them a larger price than the Government consented to give."

Mr. HUNT said he wished to know how payment for the purchase of the vessels in question was to be provided, and whether an estimate for the purpose would be laid on the table.

Mr. CHAMBERS—If the honorable gentleman asks the question to-morrow, I will answer it. [A laugh.]

Mr. HORWOOD—What is the price of the ships?

The Attorney-General—The price, as they stand, was fixed by the valuer for the Admiralty at £195,000, and for their completion in all respects a further sum of £25,000 will be required.

An Honorable Member—What was the price first demanded?

The Attorney-General—£300,000.

THE ALABAMA.

FRENCH AGENTS TO COME TO THE UNITED STATES.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times hears that two delegates, one civil, the other military, have been sent by the French Government to America, for the purpose of ascertaining the real state and prospect of the belligerents, and to report thereon to the Emperor. It is also stated that overtures have again been made on the part of France to the English Government, with a view to devise means of putting a stop to the frightful and useless carnage between Federals and Confederates.

COMMENTS ON THE AMERICAN WAR.

The London Times, after reviewing the latest phase of the campaign in Virginia as indicated in the advices per the North American, says it is prepared to hear of the complete failure of GRANT's expedition. It thinks unless GRANT can maintain a superiority in the field, it is a question whether he will be able to recross the Potomac with more than a remnant of his force. The Times questions whether the war party of the North will be dominant any longer, if GRANT fails.

The Morning Star regards the military prospects as more favorable for the North, and denounces the pro-Southern coloring given to the state of affairs by the Times.

The Army and Navy Gazette recapitulates the events of the campaign, and says that so far it has produced no result commensurate with the hopes and sacrifices of the Northern States. It thinks LEE's retreat looks very like the retreat of WELLINGTON at Waterloo, and that Spottsylvania may yet become the Waterloo of the Confederates.

ENGLAND.

PROCEEDINGS IN PARLIAMENT.

In the House of Commons, May 30, Mr. CARDWELL stated that an application had been made by a Mr. COLLINS, the Concessionnaire of the Russo-American Telegraph, to carry a portion of it through British Columbia. The answer of Government stated the terms on which permission would be granted.

A letter from St. Petersburgh states that the telegraph intended to place the Old and the New Worlds in communication by way of Behring's, is not only decided on, but is actually in course of execution, all the difficulties, both monetary and international, having been surmounted.

On May 31 Mr. LAYARD explained the circumstances under which the Spanish squadron in the Pacific had seized the Chincha Islands, and stated that the loading of guano for British subjects would not be interrupted thereby. No explanation from the Spanish Government had, however, yet been received.

In the House of Lords, on the 2d inst., Lord STRATFORD DE REDCLIFFE called attention to the state of Circassia and the emigration of the people, owing to the Russian excesses. Earl RUSSELL promised to produce all the information in his power. He said the details were of the most painful character, and he was afraid great barbarities had been committed.

In the House of Commons, June 2, Mr. CARDWELL, in reply to an inquiry, said that negotiations were going on between the Government and the Hudson Bay Company, with a view to the transfer of a portion of the latter's territory to the Crown.

Mr. LAYARD, in reply to Sir J. ELPHINSTONE, said the Government had not yet received the decision of the United States Government on the verdict of the court-martial on Acting-Master DONOVAN, of the United States steamer Vanderbilt, for the alleged murder of Mr. GRAY, mate of the bark Anglo-Saxon.

In the House of Commons, on the 3d, Mr. LAYARD, in reply to Lord R. CECIL, said he had received no information that a British steam-packet had been searched in a Federal harbor by Federal officers, and the newspapers contained among the private baggage removed.

ROYAL VISITS.

The Prince and Princess of Wales were on a visit to Cambridge, and were being feted by the various college authorities, &c., in brilliant style.

Prince ALFRED had arrived at Lisbon on board the frigate Racoon, and was escorted ashore by the King of Portugal.

EGYPTIAN COTTON.

Advices from Alexandria state that favorable anticipations were entertained regarding the next Egyptian cotton crop, a largely increased yield being expected.

THE DANO-GERMAN WAR.

The Conference reassembled in London on the 2d June, and on rising appointed the 6th of June for the next sitting.

The Morning Herald contains the most circumstantial account of the proceedings at the Conference. It understands that the German Plenipotentiaries demand the cession of Flensburg and Duppell, while the neutral Powers adhere to the line of the Schleswig and the Dannewerke, as the Danish frontier. It is stated that the representatives of Denmark desire that the German Powers and the neutrals should come to an agreement on the subject before calling upon Denmark to give her answer. A proposal was also made and accepted, ad referendum, for the prolongation of the armistice for fifteen days, on the condition that no further extension should take place unless the basis of a peace were agreed to.

The London Times says all accounts represent the feeling in the Danish Capital as warlike beyond all former example. The Danes will not make peace on the basis of giving up everything that could possibly be lost by war. They are making the most of their fleet, they are strengthening their defences, and are ready to try the chances of another campaign. They know that even non-intervening England and unsympathetic France can never allow their country to be blotted out of the list of nations. In these circumstances it is needless to say that the meeting of the Conference on the 2d was not marked by any very cheering progress in the negotiations. The neutral representatives are still, however, endeavoring to make the most of the time that intervenes before the resumption of hostilities.

The Daily News points out that the only ground on which the prolongation of the truce can reasonably be asked for is the prospect of some satisfactory settlement being arrived at, and this, of course, depends on the acceptance by the conference of some definite basis of peace. If there is no prospect of this—if the German Powers persist in exacting, at the conference, demands that could only be made from an utterly vanquished foe—the continuance of the conference is simply a mischievous delusion, and there is no reason why the war should not go on. The Danes already begin to feel that the conference will do nothing for them.

On the 2d of June, in the German Federal Diet, at the proposition of the United Committees, the Federal Governments were summoned to prohibit the export by sea of gunpowder and arms from North Germany.

According to the German papers, at the meeting of the Conference on the 2d, the Danish plenipotentiaries declined a prolongation of the armistice, but promised, at the solicitation of the neutral Powers, to procure instructions from their Government in time for the meeting of the 6th of June.

The Duke of Augustenburg had left Kiel, en route for Berlin.

The London Gazette contains a notice from M. DE BILLE, Danish Minister from the British Legation, stating that, in conformity with the stipulations of the suspension of hostilities, the blockade of the ports which were raised on May 12 will be reëstablished on the 12th of June, the day on which the suspension of hostilities terminates, unless negotiations, carried on at the conference at London, should before then have led to at least some preliminary arrangements. No neutral ship which, after the renewal of the war, might attempt to enter any one of the blockaded ports would be subject to capture, except where previous notice of the reëstablishment of the blockade had been received in the ordinary way or through the ships of the blockading squadron itself.

FRANCE.

M. RENAN, whose theological works have recently caused so much discussion, had been appointed Assistant Curator of the Imperial Library; but he had published a letter declining the appointment, and declaring his wish to retain the title of Professor of the Hebrew and Syriac languages, and to continue to lecture thereupon without salary.

The Bourse was firm, and Rentes on the 3d advanced to 67.10.

ITALY.

In the Chamber of Deputies on the 3d the Minister of the Interior said Government had no knowledge of any enrollment or concentration of Italian emigrants, and was resolved to prevent every movement in contravention of the laws.

SPAIN.

The London Times says intelligence from Madrid warrants a hope that the dispute with Peru will soon be honorably settled, the Spanish Government having entirely disapproved the recent conduct of their Admiral at Lima.

Rumors were current at Madrid of a probable modification of the Ministry after the close of the session of the Cortes.

A bill regulating political meetings had been passed by the Cortes.

GREECE.

The cession of the Ionian Islands to Greece had been formally completed, amid great enthusiasm. In compliance with the wish of Greece, however, England will extend her protection over the Ionian inhabitants, in their relation with the Turkish authorities, for another year.

THE BRAZILS.

The mails had reached England.

The commercial news has been generally anticipated by the telegrams via Lisbon.

OUR NEXT VICE-PRESIDENT.

Speech of Gov. Johnson at Nashville.

A Union mass meeting was held at Nashville on Friday night last, at which Gov. JOHNSON was the principal speaker. We find the following report in the Nashville Times:

The appearance of Gov. JOHNSON on the steps of the St. Cloud Hotel was greeted by the vast crowd with loud applause. All were anxious to hear and see the next Vice-President of the United States.

After thanking the assembly for the compliment they had bestowed on him, and a few other preliminary remarks, Gov. JOHNSON proceeded to say that we are engaged in a great struggle for free government in the proper acceptation of the term.

So far as the head of the ticket is concerned, the Baltimore Convention has said, not only to the United States, but to all the nations of the earth, that we are determined to maintain and carry out the principle of free government. [Applause.] That convention announced and confirmed a principle not to be disregarded. It was that the right of secession, and the power of a State to place itself out of the Union, are not recognized. The convention had declared this principle by its action. Tennessee had been in rebellion against the Government, and waged a treasonable war against its authority, just as other Southern States had done. She had seceded just as much as other States had, and left the Union as far as she had the power to do so. Nevertheless, the National Convention had declared that a State cannot put itself from under the national authority. It said by its first nomination, that the present President, take him altogether, was the man to steer the ship of State for the next four years. [Loud applause.] Next it said—if I may be permitted to speak of myself, not in the way of vanity, but to illustrate a principle—"We will go into one of the rebellious States and choose a candidate for the Vice-Presidency." Thus the Union party declared its belief that the rebellious States are still in the Union, and that their loyal citizens are still citizens of the United States. And now there is but one great work for us to do; that is, to put down the rebellion. Our duty is to sustain the Government, and help it with all our might to crush out a rebellion which is in violation of all that is right and sacred.

Gov. JOHNSON said he had no impassioned appeal to make to the people in his own behalf. He had not sought the position assigned him by the National Convention. Not a man in all the land can truthfully say that I have asked him to use his influence in my behalf in that body for the position allotted to me, or for any other. On the contrary, I have avoided the candidacy. But while I have not sought it, still, being conferred upon me unsought, I appreciate it the more highly. Being conferred upon me without solicitation, I shall not decline it. [Applause.] Come weal or woe, success or defeat, sink or swim, survive or perish, I accept the nomination, on principle, be the consequences what they may. I will do what I believe to be my duty. I know there are those here who profess to feel a contempt for me, and I, on the other hand, feel my superiority to them. I have always understood that there is a sort of exclusive aristocracy about Nashville which affects to contemn all who are not within its little circle. Let them enjoy their opinions. I have heard it said that

"Worth makes the man, and want of it the fellow."

This aristocracy has been the bane of the Slave States, nor has the North been wholly free from its curse. It is a class which I have always forced to respect me, for I have ever set it at defiance. The respect of the honest, intelligent and industrious class I have ever endeavored to win by my conduct as a man. One of the chief elements of this rebellion is the opposition of the slave aristocracy to being ruled by men who have risen from the ranks of the people. This aristocracy hated Mr. LINCOLN because he was of humble origin, a rail-splitter in early life. One of them, the private secretary of HOWELL COBB, said to me one day, after a long conversation, "We people of the South will not submit to be governed by a man who has come up from the ranks of the common people, as ABE LINCOLN has." He uttered the essential feeling and spirit of this Southern rebellion. Now it has just occurred to me, if this aristocracy is so violently opposed to being governed by Mr. LINCOLN, what in the name of conscience will it do with LINCOLN and JOHNSON? [Great Laughter.] I reject with scorn this whole idea of an arrogant aristocracy. I believe that man is capable of self-government, irrespective of his outward circumstances, and whether he be a laborer, a shoemaker, a tailor, or a grocer. The question is whether man is capable of self government. I hold with JEFFERSON that Government was made for the convenience of man, and not man for the Government. That laws and constitutions were designed as mere instruments to promote his welfare. And hence, from this principle, I conclude that Governments can and ought to be changed and amended to conform to the wants, to the requirements and progress of the people, and the enlightened spirit of the age. [Loud applause.] Now if any of your secessionists have lost faith in man's capability of self-government, and feel unfit for the exercise of this great right, go straight to rebeldom, take JEFF. DAVIS, BEAUREGARD and BRAGG for your masters, and put their collars on your necks.

And here let me say, that now is the time to recur to these fundamental principles, while the land is rent with anarchy, and upheaves with the throes of a mighty revolution. While society is in this disordered state, and we are seeking security, let us fix the foundations of the Government on principles of eternal justice, which will endure for all time. There is an element in our midst who are for perpetuating the institution of Slavery. Let me say to you, Tennesseeans and men from the Northern States, that Slavery is dead. It was not murdered by me. I told you long ago what the result would be, if you endeavored to go out of the Union to save Slavery, and that the result would be bloodshed, rapine, devastated fields, plundered villages and cities; and therefore I urged you to remain in the Union. In trying to save Slavery you killed it and lost your own freedom. Your Slavery is dead, but I did not murder it. As Macbeth said to Banquo's bloody ghost:

> "Never shake thy gory locks at me,
> Thou canst not say I did it."

Slavery is dead, and you must pardon me if I do not mourn over its dead body; you can bury it out of sight. In restoring the State, leave out that disturbing and dangerous element, and use only those parts of the machinery which will move in harmony.

Now, in regard to emancipation, I want to say to the blacks that liberty means liberty to work and enjoy the fruits of your labor. Idleness is not freedom. I desire that all men shall have a fair start and an equal chance in the race of life, and let him succeed who has the most merit. This, I think, is a principle of heaven. I am for emancipation for two reasons; first, because it is right in itself, and second, because in the emancipation of the slaves, we break down an odious and dangerous aristocracy. I think that we are freeing more whites than blacks in Tennessee. I want to see slavery broken up, and when its barriers are thrown down, I want to see industrious, thrifty emigrants pouring in from all parts of the country. Come on! We need your labor, your skill, your capital. We want your enterprise and invention, so that hereafter Tennessee may rank with New-England in the arts and mechanics, and that when we visit the Patent Office at Washington, where the ingenious mechanics of the Free States have placed their models, we need not blush that Tennessee can show nothing but a mousetrap, or something of about as much importance. Come on! We greet you with a hearty welcome to the soil of Tennessee. Here is soil the most fertile in every agricultural product; a delightful and healthy climate; forests, water-power, and mines of inexhaustible riches. Come and help us redeem Tennessee, and make her a powerful and flourishing State.

But in calling a convention to restore the State, who shall restore and reëstablish it? Shall the man who gave his influence and his means to destroy the Government? Is he to participate in the great work of reorganization? Shall he who brought this misery upon the State be permitted to control its destinies? If this be so, then all this precious blood of our brave soldiers and officers so freely poured out, will have been wantonly spilled. All the glorious victories won by our noble armies will go for nought, and all the battle-fields which have been sown with dead heroes during this rebellion will have been made memorable in vain. Why all this carnage and devastation? It was that treason might be put down and traitors punished. Therefore I say that traitors should take a back seat in the work of restoration. If there be but five thousand men in Tennessee, loyal to the Constitution, loyal to freedom, loyal to justice, these true and faithful men should control the work of reorganization and reformation absolutely. [Loud and prolonged applause.] I say that the traitor has ceased to be a citizen, and, in joining the rebellion, has become a public enemy. He forfeited his right to vote with loyal men when he renounced his citizenship and sought to destroy our Government. We say to the most honest and industrious foreigner who comes from England or Germany to dwell among us, and to add to the wealth of the country, "Before you can be a citizen you must stay here for five years." If we are so cautious about foreigners, who voluntarily renounce their homes to live with us, what should we say to the traitor, who, although born and reared among us, has raised a parricidal hand against the Government which always protected him? My judgment is, that he should be subjected to a severe ordeal before he is restored to citizenship. A fellow who takes the oath merely to save his property, and denies the validity of the oath, is a perjured man and not to be trusted. Before these repenting rebels can be trusted, let them bring forth the fruits of repentance. He who helped to make all these widows and orphans who drape the streets of Nashville in mourning, should suffer for his great crime. The work is in our own hands. We can destroy this rebellion. With GRANT thundering on the Potomac, before Richmond, and SHERMAN and THOMAS on their march toward Atlanta, the day will ere long be ours. Will any madly persist in rebellion? Suppose that an equal number be slain in every battle, it is plain that the result must be the utter extermination of the rebels. Ah, these rebel leaders have a strong personal reason for holding out to save their necks from the halter. And these leaders must feel the power of the Government. Treason must be made odious, and traitors must be punished and impoverished. Their great plantations must be seized and divided into small farms, and sold to honest, industrious men. The day for protecting the lands and negroes of these authors of rebellion is past. It is high time it was. I have been most deeply pained at some things which have come under my observation. We get men in command who, under the influence of flattery, fawning and caressing, grant protection to the rich traitor, while the poor Union man stands out in the cold, often unable to get a receipt or a voucher for his losses. [Cries of "That's so" from all parts of the crowd.] The traitor can get lucrative contracts, while the loyal man is pushed aside unable to obtain a recognition of his just claims. I am telling the truth. I care nothing for stripes and shoulder-straps. I want them all to hear what I say. I have been on a gridiron for two years at the sight of these abuses. I blame not the Government for these wrongs, which are the work of weak or faithless subordinates. Wrongs will be committed under every form of government and every Administration. For myself I mean to stand by the Government till the flag of the Union shall wave over every city, town, hilltop and cross-roads, in its full power and majesty. The nations of Europe are anxious for our overthrow. France takes advantage of our internal difficulties and sends MAXIMILIAN off to Mexico to set up a monarchy on our borders. The day of reckoning is approaching. The time is not far distant when the rebellion will be put down, and then we will attend to this Mexican affair, and say to LOUIS NAPOLEON, "You can set up no monarchy on this continent." [Great applause.] An expedition into Mexico would be a sort of recreation to the brave soldiers who are now fighting the battles of the Union, and the French concern would quickly be wiped out. Let us be united. I know that there are but two parties now, one for the country, and the other against it, and I am for my country.

I am a Democrat in the strictest meaning of the term. I am for this Government because it is democratic—a Government of the people. I am for putting down this rebellion, because it is war against democracy. He who stands off, stirring up discontent in this State and higgling about negroes, is practically in the rebel camp and encourages treason. He who, in Indiana or Ohio, makes war upon the Government out of regard to Slavery, is just as bad. The salvation of the country is now the only business which concerns the patriot.

In conclusion, let us give our thanks, not formal but heartfelt thanks, to these gallant officers and soldiers, who have come to our rescue, and delivered us from the rebellion. And though money be expended, though life be lost, though farms and cities be desolated, let the war for the Union go on, and the Stars and Stripes be bathed, if need be, in a nation's blood, till law be restored and freedom firmly established.

Gov. JOHNSON retired amid loud and continued cheering, and the large crowd dispersed to their homes.

A Speech by Secretary Chase.

HIS VIEWS OF THE SITUATION.

From the Washington Republican, June 14.

Last evening the excellent band attached to the One Hundred and Fifth Ohio Regiment serenaded Secretary CHASE at his residence, and a large crowd immediately assembled and greeted the Secretary with loud cheers when he made his appearance to respond to the compliment. Mr. CHASE acknowledged the honor paid him in the following terms:

If I answer your call, my friends, it is because your kindness requires it of me—not because I feel in the mood for speaking to-night.

Our armies confront, at this very moment, the armies of the rebellion through the whole long line of operations from the Potomac to the Chattahoochee. Even now they may be engaged in deadly conflict. Every day, almost every hour, brings from the field some dear friend or dear relative covered with noble wounds, or brings news that some other friend or relative not less dear has fallen in the fight, offering his precious life for the more precious life of his country.

My thoughts are with our soldiers in the battle, in the bivouac, on the march, in the hospital, or in their early, honored graves. [A Voice: "Is there any bad news?"] No, no bad news; no news but good news; yet even good news is saddened by the loss of brave men.

It is but yesterday that a young hero of my own name and blood was borne hither from the field near Richmond to die. At this moment another relative rests awhile beneath my roof from search for his brave boy, wounded in the same battle. And so it is with us all—all have near friends, dear relatives, who sleep their last sleep or suffer in hospitals, or still full of courage and hope and patriotic ardor, press the enemy in heroic conflict. Our thoughts, our sympathies, our aspirations must be with them, whether they follow persisting GRANT to the capture of Richmond, or impetuous SHERMAN through Georgia to the ocean; and we cannot but feel too deeply for much speaking.

Still, let me say a word of the part our own honored State—for I suppose you are, most of you, Ohio men who stand before me—takes in this sacred contest for Union and freedom. I have just named two of her sons who lead our two greatest armies, now driving rebellion, as we hope, to its last extremity. I need not name the other great leaders she has given to the country; nor need I remind you how, in all the war, Ohio has been foremost among the foremost. No troops came more promptly into the field than hers; none from so great a distance came so quickly to the defence of this national capital in the dark days of 1861.

No State in proportion to its population, has sent forth so many regiments. From no State has so many veterans reënlisted; and lately when GRANT wanted the trained troops from the camps and forts within immediate reach, for service in the field, what other State than Ohio furnished her thirty-five thousand volunteers for duty in their room? I know the worth of this oblation. I count personal friends among the officers and men by hundreds. I know from what professions, from what business, from what employments they come. Every useful and honorable avocation has contributed its quota. The best men of the State make up the rank and file. Regiment after regiment of them have already gone to the front.

May we not, then, indulge an honest pride that Ohio is our State? Who can help saying, from the very depths of his heart, God bless Ohio! and God bless her glorious sons, who take their lives in their hands for the salvation of the Republic! If other duties detain some of us from sharing personally their trials and dangers, let us so perform these duties that we, too, may feel that we have done something for our country. Then may we join, without shame in building the monuments of our fallen heroes; in welcoming home the brave men who return; and in repeating to children and to children's children the great acts by which Union and Liberty were saved in North America.

GEN. SHERMAN'S ARMY.

The Battle of Dallas—Desperate Assault of the Rebels Upon McPherson's Corps—They are Repulsed with Terrible Loss.

Correspondence of the Chicago Tribune.

NEAR DALLAS, Ga., Sunday, May 29, 1864.

During the night of the 26th the trains of the Army of Tennessee were moved from an exposed position in which they had been packed to one further in the rear. This movement was much on a road which at several points was in full view of the rebels on Lost Mountain. During the day our wounded and sick were removed from the buildings in the village of Dallas, which had been used as a temporary hospital, back to the Pumpkin Vine Creek. These movements were, of course, observed by the enemy.

About 5 o'clock in the afternoon the rebels advanced their skirmishers along the whole front of the Army of the Tennessee. Our front was covered with a rifle-pit extending along its whole length, a distance of some two miles, and the right flank by WILDER's brigade of the Second Cavalry Division. HARROW's Fourth Division of the Fifteenth Corps has the extreme right of the line, and VEATCH's, the Fourth Division of the Sixteenth Corps, the extreme left—the centre, consisting of SWEENEY's division of the Sixteenth and MORGAN L. SMITH's and OSTERHAUS' division of the Fifteenth Corps.

Advancing a heavy line of skirmishers with great rapidity, our skirmishers in a short time fell back to the rifle-pits. Our troops of the main army, who were quietly observing the movements of the enemy, at the first volley of the skirmishers, fell instantly into their places behind the breastworks. General, and field, and staff and line officers sprang to their posts, and in less time than I occupy in narrating, the Army of the Tennessee was in line to receive assault. Two miles of as good men as ever stood in line of battle, all Western regiments but one, confronted HARDEE and POLK's corps. For the first time in the war, with nearly all the regiments, our men were behind breastworks and being attacked.

Although it was well understood that the movement of the trains had attracted the notice of the rebels and would very probably induce the belief that our positions were being changed, and that an attack was very probable, yet the attack was so sudden and so rapid that it was necessary to make haste quickly with orders and dispositions.

Gen. LOGAN, at the first volley, mounted his horse and rode rapidly along to the front. Following close after our skirmishers, as they fell back to rifle-pits, came the rebel lines of battle. With a rebel yell they rushed headlong, charging bravely on the whole line, at the same time under a heavy fire of artillery. Under the orders of their officers, these troops reserved their fire and awaited the shock. LOGAN rode along the whole line of his corps, hat in hand, his black hair streaming in the air, and at full speed, urging his men at the top of his voice, to "save their fire and give them h—ll." The effect was electrical, the regiments cheered with a will, and one could mark his progress along the line by the shouts of his regiments.

Soon after, Gen. MCPHERSON and his Staff rode from his headquarters, on the left of the Sixteenth Corps, along the whole line. The battle was raging furiously, but the men saw their Commander, and their cheers arose wildly upon the din of battle. Altogether, that short hour, with the enthusiastic shouts of the Federals, the fierce yells of the rebels, and the continuous crash of small arms, was fearfully exciting.

The Federal line reserved its fire until the rebels were within thirty yards. The first volley was instantaneous. It seemed to leap from the long line of rifle-pits at the moment of time. Such another volley of musketry has seldom been heard. The volley from the rear rank followed, and the battle was opened. The rebels fell like grain—scores at a time lay side by side. The battle lasted until night. It was mostly confined to infantry. In the line of the Second Division, Gen. GILES A. SMITH had placed a section of battery B, First Artillery, which, double shotted with grape, made great havoc. On HARDEE's line a section of the First Iowa Battery was at the front. The remainder of the artillery, however, was on the high ground back of the line of battle. In the close struggle for the rifle-pits, it could not be used without injuring alike friend and foe. How and in what manner the terrible struggle of the rebels to drive in the right wing was conducted, I cannot tell you. All we know is that they repeatedly reformed and renewed the assaults, and with the utmost desperation charged up to the very muzzles of our rifles, and that these ineffectual assaults and struggles were renewed until the rebel force, all cut up, was withdrawn. On the extreme right the rebels, at one time, gained a slight advantage. The Second Brigade was slightly shattered, and a section of the First Iowa Battery captured. Just at this time Gen. LOGAN rode up and ordered the guns to be recaptured. The Sixth Iowa charged the enemy and retook the guns. The brigade suffered severely, Col. DICKERMAN, of the One Hundred and Third Illinois, fell mortally wounded. Maj. GIESY, of the Forty-sixth Ohio, and Lieut.-Col. MILLER, of the Sixth Iowa, fell mortally wounded. In the front of the brigade 275 dead and wounded rebels lay in sight at daylight. WILDER's brigade of mounted infantry, which was on the right flank, was dismounted and came up and poured in a continuous oblique fire from the sixteen shooting rifles. The rebel loss in his front was heavy. At one place in front of LIGHTBURN's brigade, 21 dead rebels lay in one heap. In front of VEATCH's division a portion of the rebel line was staggered, and its left fell back to the right. As it fell back, Gen. DODGE saw the opportunity and ordered a regiment over the breastworks. The regiment delivered an oblique fire that left over a hundred on the field.

Gen. DODGE buried 160 in his front. Considered in all respects, the desperate valor of the rebels, the rapidity and pertinacity of the assaults, and the coolness and steadiness with which our men and officers received and repulsed them, and the slight loss of our army, and the terrible slaughter of the rebels, and it was one of the most remarkable battles of the war.

Our loss did not reach 300, of whom I send you the names of nearly all. The rebel loss cannot be ascertained by us with certainty. About the close of the engagement a rebel officer came to Gen. MORGAN L. SMITH, that Gen. HARDEE wished the firing stopped that he might bring off his wounded. He was answered by Gen. MCPHERSON's order, that if he would send a flag he would answer it. During the night all the rebel wounded that could, crawled back into their lines. As soon as it was light the next morning our men commenced burying the rebel dead and bringing in the rebel wounded, but were frequently fired upon, so that their interment was by no means completed. We buried, however, during the day 400 rebels. At that amount alone, their loss must have reached at least 2,500 in killed and wounded. Estimating six wounded to one killed, I think that 3,000 is a reasonable estimate of the rebel loss in their assault upon the Army of the Tennessee.

A deserter, who came in to-day, says he heard Gen. HARDEE say that he had lost 2,500 of his best men. The rebel officers and men who have fallen into our hands all stated that they had been informed and believed that our army was, to a very great extent, composed of one hundred days' men. They did not expect to meet the veterans of the Western army.

I regret to record a severe casualty to Col. EZRA TAYLOR, of Chicago, Chief of Artillery of the Department of the Tennessee. As he was riding along the lines of the Fifteenth Corps with Gen. LOGAN, this afternoon, a rifle ball struck Gen. LOGAN on the arm, tearing his coat sleeve, and glancing, struck Col. TAYLOR. The ball passed through his coat, a thick book, and entering at the right nipple passed around next to the bones, and lodged under the edge of his shoulder-blade. The wound is severe but not dangerous. He starts for his home to-night.

EAST TENNESSEE REBELS ROUTED IN UPPER EAST TENNESSEE.—Our advices from Greene County, in Upper East Tennessee, are most gratifying. A week or so ago, Maj. DAVE FRY, whose name is a terror to all rebels, ascertained that JOHN ARNOLD, JOHN FITZPATRICK, SAM. DAVIS and other rebel thieves were in Greeneville, and immediately determined to capture them or give them a devil of a thrashing. He gathered together a number of our gallant mountain boys, and, with a few regular soldiers, DAVE surrounded the town. The whole affair was managed with such admirable secrecy that they were taken wholly by surprise, and report says that each man looked out for himself, without regard to rank or character for pluck. About twelve were killed in the attack. Some thirty were captured, but all but about twenty died on their way to Knoxville. Lieut. REYNOLDS, a brother of the noted Captain of that name, died suddenly.—Chattanooga Gazette, June 7.

MISS DR. WALKER HEARD FROM.—A letter dated "Castle Thunder," Richmond, has been received by the mother of Miss Dr. MARY E. WALKER, from which it appears that the heroic little surgeon bears her imprisonment lightly. The following is an extract from her letter:

"I hope you are not grieving about me, because I am a prisoner of war. I am living in a three-story brick 'castle,' with plenty to eat and a clean bed to sleep in. I have a room mate, a young lady about twenty years of age, from near Corinth, Mississippi, (Miss MARTHA MANUS.) I am much happier than I might be in some relations of life where I might be envied by other ladies.

"The officers are gentlemanly and kind, and it will not be long before I am exchanged."—Oswego Times.

The Fort Gansevoort Property Purchase—The Demurrer Goes by Default—The Mayor, Although a Defendant, Joins with the Plaintiffs—the People.

SUPREME COURT—SPECIAL TERM.

Before Justice Barnard.

The People vs. The Mayor, &c., C. Godfrey Gunther, Matthew T. Brennan, James B. Taylor, Simeon Draper, D. D. Williamson and Jos. B. Varnum.—This is the action commenced by the Attorney-General, to set aside the sale of the Fort Gansevoort property by the City to Varnum, Draper and others, in 1852, and to set aside the repurchase of the same property from Taylor and others by the City, in 1860, on the ground that the original sale in 1852 was void, and that the title to the property still remains in the City—never having lawfully passed from it. The Mayor, who is necessarily a party defendant, appeared and joined in the prayer of the people.

The Comptroller demurred to the complaint, but no one appearing, the demurrer was yesterday dismissed.

John Cochrane, Attorney-General; John E. Burrill, and R. W. and R. B. Roosevelt, for the plaintiffs. Wm. F. Allen for Comptroller. Edwards Pierrepont for the Mayor, as a party plaintiff.

SUPREME COURT—SPECIAL TERM.

Before Justice J. F. Barnard.

John Donovan vs. The Mayor, &c.—The plaintiff sued to recover for work and labor done on the public roads of this City during the months of November and December, 1863.

The answer set up as its main defences, that there was no authority for the employment of the plaintiff given by the Common Council, and that the necessity for the work was not certified to by the Street Commissioner. It was further alleged that the plaintiff was employed after the appropriation was exhausted, and that no provision had been made in regard to it.

The plaintiff demurred to this defence, averring that the matters it set forth were of no avail as a defence to the action. Decision was reserved.

Thos. C. Fields, for plaintiff; John E. Haskett, for Corporation.

Notice to the Bar.

SUPREME COURT—CHAMBERS.

All motions to be noticed for the first Monday of July, (being the Fourth of July,) must be made returnable on Tuesday, at 12 M., and the calling of the motion calendar will stand adjourned to Wednesday, July 6, at 12 M.

WEDNESDAY, June 15—P. M.

Up to 5 o'clock this afternoon the only authentic news from Washington in regard to the $75,000,000 Loan of 1881 is to the effect that bids for $30,000,000 had been opened at 104 ⅌ cent. and upward, and for $10,000,000 below 104 ⅌ cent., and down to 100½@101 ⅌ cent. Nothing was known of the whole extent of the bidding. The work would not be through with before 6 o'clock. The range of offers below 104 ⅌ cent. will probably disappoint the Secretary, and his decision on the question of accepting these offers will not be known before to-morrow.

From the very beginning of the War to the present experiment of negotiating through the capitalists, so called, of the great cities, the Government has derived its main support by direct appeal to the People. While fives or tens of millions have been negotiated at Bank or through Bankers and Brokers on proposals for round sums, fifties and hundreds of millions have been taken up, at par, by voluntary popular subscription. It was so with the 7-30 per cents in 1861; with the 5-20 Loan in 1863–4, and with the 10-40 Loan, up to the appearance of the present Loan, this Spring. We believe that the Secretary himself felt it to be a doubtful experiment to interpose the 1881 Stock while his 10-40 5 ⅌ cents were gradually gaining in popular favor, and he would probably have preferred a 7-30 ⅌ cent. temporary Currency issue, convertible into the 5 ⅌ cent. 10-40 Gold-bearing Stock, but for the extreme outside pressure in favor of the 1881's at 6 ⅌ cent. in Gold, for which he had assurances of a liberal premium. We apprehend that the result of this day's bidding has fallen short of these promises, and that the very parties who urged him to a change of policy, the wisdom of which was extremely doubtful from the start, will be found among the lowest and least liberal bidders, both as to rate and the amounts offered for.

The prices of the United States of 1881 and 5-20's were a fraction higher this afternoon than yesterday, and there is a continued firm demand for them. Allowing full 6 ⅌ cent. as the currency value of the July coupon on the 1881 Bonds, the price at the Stock Exchange is equal to 106½ ⅌ cent., ex-dividend. The registered Stock sold as high as 107 ⅌ cent. The last sale of the 5-20's, interest from May 1, was at 105¾ ⅌ cent.

The Railway speculation was partially firmer than yesterday through the business of the forenoon, but at the close the differences from Tuesday's 4 o'clock bids were not important. The general market is tame, and the volume of business on speculation continues much below the daily average a few months ago. At 4 o'clock the following rates were quoted, as compared with the same hour yesterday:

The price of Gold opened rather dearer than yesterday, but fell back to the same quotation, 196½@197 ⅌ cent. No important transactions in Foreign Bills took place after the sailing of the Cunard steamer.

Money 6@7 ⅌ cent., and the supply to the Brokers quite easy. The extent of their borrowing, however, in the present dull condition of the Stock Exchange, is not great. The deposits with the Treasury Office to-day on 6 ⅌ cent. interest amount to $3,350,744.

The following bids were made to-day for the City Bank Shares:

The Gold Act passed by Congress, and which will immediately receive the approval of the President, will have the effect of closing at once the Gold Gambling Room on the corner of Exchange-place and William-street, and all other outside speculation in Gold and Foreign Bills. Business in either must hereafter be done at the counters or in the offices of the Bullion Brokers and Foreign Bankers. And it must be done with cash in hand, except where ten days is allowed for the delivery of Foreign Exchange, made against shipments abroad, and contracted to be delivered in good faith and with no intent or purpose to wager upon the future price of Gold or Exchange, or to evade the spirit of the restraining Act.

The Act, we have reason to believe, will be strictly enforced from the start. There will be no delay from the "constitutional" doubt of the power of Congress, supported by one of the disaffected evening papers. Mr. GILPIN will probably close his Gold Room without waiting to try this issue. We are quite sure the New-York Stock Exchange will strike Gold from their official list of dealings as soon as the Act is signed by the President. There has been very little done in it, at the Board, for a year past. If, after these movements, any adventurous or defiant party of speculators attempt to violate or evade its provisions in the open street, the police of the Government will no doubt be on hand to exact the penalties which it prescribes. The Act contemplates no interference with legitimate trade in Gold or Exchange, for ready money, but simply confines it to the offices of the licensed Brokers and Bankers of the City.

HAY—North River continues plenty and in request, at $1 25@$1 30 ⅌ 100 lbs.

HOPS—Have been in fair demand, at 15c.@30c. for common to very choice ⅌ lb. The Troy Whig says: "From present indications our brewers will have to pay a good round sum for hops for the coming season. One paper from the central part of the State says that reports from hop growers in that section do not place the vine in a very forward state; not so much so as at the same time last year. There is also considerable complaint about lice. In some parts of Madison the vine is reported to be healthy and growing rapidly, and other parts the reverse is the case. Speculations in regard to the coming crop, at the present time are useless, but the general opinion seems to be that the crop will not be so heavy nor so good as that of last year. Another report from Oneida County says a recent visit through the southern part of our county, proves to us that the hop crop in that section does not promise as well as at this time last year, and this is almost the universal opinion of hop growers. One reason against a large yield this year, is the scarcity of help—few yards looking as though they received the best of attention."

PROVISIONS—Speculation in Pork continues quite brisk, at rapidly advancing prices. Sales since our last, 11,900 bbls., in lots, at $35 50@$40 50, also at $38 25 for Mess Meat, $36@$38 50 for June, and $37@$37 50 for July delivery; $32@$34 for Old Mess; $34 50@$35 50 for Prime Mess, and $30@$34 for Thin Mess and $30@$33 for Prime, ⅌ bbl. By Councilman Webster—

Whereas, at the late fire in Division-street, occurring on the night of May the thirty-first, at which the little daughter of Bernard Heller, a worthy and respected citizen, met with a fearful death, the lives of Mr. Heller and his wife being happily saved by the generous and manly exertions of Mr. Francis Mahedy, Thomas McGrath, and Thomas Tyler, members of Engine Company number Thirty-one, who, at the imminent risk and peril of their own lives, fearlessly entered the blazing dwelling to rescue the sleeping inmates; and

Whereas, Deeming it proper and just that such heroic courage and humane action on the part of these noble-hearted firemen, that shed so bright a lustre upon our Fire Department, and which are so worthy of emulation, should not pass unnoticed, but meet with a proper recognition and reward; therefore be it

Resolved, That a copy of these preambles and resolutions be transmitted to each of the above-named gentlemen, and signed by the proper officers of both Boards of the Common Council, and bearing the seal of the City of New-York, in testimony of their excellence and worth, and as a tribute to their generous and noble act.

Which was referred to Committee on Fire Department.

Preamble reciting that this Common Council has learned that Brigadier-General James S. Wadsworth, an honored citizen of our State, a brave, patriotic and accomplished soldier, a pure, sincere and benevolent Christian and philanthropist in the truest acceptation of the term, is dead. He was killed on Friday, the sixth instant, while gallantly leading and fighting in advance of the Fourth Division of the Fifth Corps of the Army of the Potomac, to the command of which he was assigned in one of the battles for the capture of the capital of the rebellious States; that the ardent love of country that characterized every act of the deceased soldier; his self-denial, his pure, unselfish devotion to and sacrifices for the welfare of the nation, his patriotic efforts to advance its interests, his aspirations for the preservation and perpetuation of the great fabric of human freedom erected by the Fathers of this Republic, combined with his geniality of disposition, his urbane and gentlemanly deportment, his Christian charity and unbounded benevolence, have endeared him to every lover of his country, every citizen of the Republic, and every pure minded and honorable admirer of the brave, the patriotic, the wise and good. His death is a national calamity; as the vigor of his intellect, the wisdom and foresight of his counsels, the weight and influence of his honesty, integrity and sincerity, were largely instrumental in giving direction to the policy of the National Government, and we look in vain for one possessed in such eminent degree of similar attributes of greatness to fill the place thus vacated by his death; that in the sorrow that will be universally experienced at the death of such a man, it is but meet and just that this Common Council, the immediate representatives of one-fifth of the population of his native State, should give expression to their regret, and should endeavor to make manifest their sense of the loss to the nation and to the State of the great and good man, and that they should place among the archives of the City their estimation of the character and services of the deceased patriot, as well as to place on record their admiration for his character as a man, his intrepid bravery as a soldier, and his purity, honesty and disinterestedness as a citizen; with resolution that this Common Council do sincerely lament and deplore the loss to our country, occasioned by the death of this great and good man, at a period in its history when men of his standing, character, capabilities and worth are so much needed in its councils, and in executing the mandates of its Government; while to his immediate family and relations we offer our heartfelt sympathy, and we ask to be permitted to condole with them in the irreparable loss they have sustained in being deprived of the companionship of one so universally admired, honored and esteemed for his many virtues; and second, that a copy of the foregoing preamble and resolution be duly authenticated and transmitted by the Clerk of the Common Council, on behalf of the City authorities, to the family of the deceased.

Affirmative—Councilmen Healy, Keenan, Riley, Brophy, Hagerty, Hayes, Webster, Heffernan, Ryan, Gross, Repper, Houghtalin, Haviland, McGrath, Opdyke, Jaques, Schaefer, Cook, Brandon, Brice, Russell, Fitzgerald, Joyce—23.

Report of Committee on Croton Aqueduct Department, in favor of adopting resolution that permission be given to John Saxton to tap the Croton main in the vicinity of One Hundred and Eighteenth or One Hundred and Nineteenth-street to enable him to convey water to his residence, west of Broadway, between One Hundred and Eighteenth and One Hundred and Nineteenth streets, to be done at his own expense, and under the direction of the Croton Aqueduct Department.

Which was referred to Committee on Croton Aqueduct Department.

REPORTS RESUMED.

Report of Committee on Repairs and Supplies, in relation to furnishing the Central Office of the Fire Telegraph Office with a suitable clock, in order to furnish uniform time throughout the City, and also replacing the wires which have become worn out by rust and otherwise.

Which was laid over.

Councilman Houghtalin moved that the board do now adjourn.

Which was carried.

Whereupon the President declared that the board stood adjourned to Thursday, sixteenth instant, at two o'clock P. M.

JAMES M. SWEENY, Clerk.

NEW SKIRT FOR 1864.

A NEW AND GREAT INVENTION IN HOOP SKIRTS.
THE DUPLEX ELLIPTIC (OR DOUBLE) STEEL SPRING.
J. I. & J. O. WEST, NO. 97 CHAMBERS-ST., NEW-YORK,
Are the owners of the patent and exclusive manufacturers of this.
J. W. BRADLEY'S
PATENTED DUPLEX ELLIPTIC STEEL SPRING SKIRTS.

This invention consists of Duplex (or two) Elliptic Steel Springs, ingeniously braided tightly and firmly together, edge to edge, making the toughest, most elastic, flexible and durable spring ever used, enabling the wearer, in consequence of its great elasticity and flexibleness, to place and fold the skirt when in use as easily and with the same convenience as a silk or muslin dress. It entirely obviates and silences the only objections to hoop skirts, viz.: the annoyance to the wearer as well as the public, especially in crowded assemblies, carriages, railroad cars, church pews, or in any crowded place, from the difficulty of contracting them to occupying a small space. This entirely removes the difficulty, while giving the skirt the usual full and symmetrical form, and is the lightest and most stylish and graceful appearance for the street, opera, promenade or house dress. A lady having enjoyed the pleasure, comfort and great convenience of wearing the Duplex Elliptic Spring Skirt for a single day, will never afterward willingly dispense with the use of them. They are the best quality in every part, and by far the lightest, most durable, comfortable and economical skirt made. Merchants will be supplied as above, and ladies in most first-class retail stores in this City and throughout the different States.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE REBELLION.

The news from Gen. GRANT this morning is of great importance. Secretary STANTON announces that the movement to the south side of the James, foreshadowed in previous dispatches, has been successfully accomplished. It began on Sunday night—Gen. SMITH'S corps marching to the White House, and embarking on transports for Bermuda Hundred. The main portion of the army took up the line of march toward the James—BURNSIDE and WRIGHT crossing the Chickahominy at Long Bridge, and the corps of HANCOCK and WARREN at the Jones Bridge—both bridges only in name, pontoons being used by our forces. BURNSIDE and WRIGHT then moved for Charles City, and struck the James south of that point, HANCOCK and WARREN going to Wilcox's Landing, some distance farther up the river. At 1 o'clock of Tuesday Gen. GRANT was at Bermuda Hundred, and the army was then crossing. Gen. SMITH'S corps had already begun to arrive in transports.

Gen. SHERMAN telegraphs that he was pressing the enemy on Tuesday, and had made considerable advance upon Marietta. The rebel Gen. POLK is reported to have been killed in an engagement which occurred on that day. The rebel cavalry under WHEELER had been operating in SHERMAN'S rear, at Calhoun, and had torn up the track in one or two places, and partially destroyed a train of cars, but otherwise had done no material damage to the road.

Further particulars of STURGIS' defeat show that we lost fourteen pieces of artillery, one hundred wagons, and about one thousand in killed, wounded and missing. The rebels were said to be commanded by KIRBY SMITH.

FROM EUROPE.

By the arrival of the Royal Mail steamship Scotia, we have dates from Liverpool to the 4th inst. Mr. DAYTON, the United States Minister at Paris, having made representations to the French Government, which were deemed satisfactory, that the war-vessels being built at Bordeaux and Nantes were intended for the Confederates, it was ordered that they should not be permitted to leave the ports where they are building. Two delegates are said to have been appointed by the French Government to proceed to America, ascertain the real state and prospects of the belligerents, and report the same to the Emperor. It is also reported that overtures have been made by France to the British Government, with a view to stopping the frightful and useless carnage between the Federals and Confederates. The London Times takes a very dismal view of affairs at the North, and is fully prepared to hear of the defeat of GRANT. In the House of Commons it was stated that the telegraph, which is intended to bring the Old and New World in communication by way of Behrings, is actually in course of execution. The Dano-German Conference reassembled in London on 2d of June, and on rising appointed the 6th of June for the next sitting. Notice has been given that the blockade of the ports which were raised on the 12th of May will, unless negotiations are carried on at the London Conference leading at least to some preliminary arrangements, be resumed on the 12th of June.

GENERAL NEWS.

The people crowded Cooper Institute to overflowing last evening, to ratify the nomination of LINCOLN and JOHNSON. The enthusiasm was intense, the indications unmistakable. All parties were represented, and the opening of the campaign brought with it the glad assurance of success. The mention of President LINCOLN'S name was at all times greeted with the wildest applause, and JOHNSON, of Tennessee, well shared the honors.

A demurrer to the complaint in the Fort Gansevoort property case, interposed by Comptroller BRENNAN, was yesterday dismissed by Justice J. F. BARNARD, at Special Term of the Supreme Court, no one appearing to support it. It will be remembered the action is brought by the People against the Mayor, &c., C. GODFREY GUNTHER, M. T. BRENNAN, JOSEPH B. TAYLOR and others, to set aside the sale by the City, in 1852 of the Fort Gansevoort property to VARNUM, DRAPER and others, and its repurchase by the City, in 1862, of TAYLOR and others, on the ground that the original sale was void, and that the legal title has always remained in the City.

The Cincinnati Times states that the fortifications around that city cover an area of nine miles, have eighty pieces of cannon of large calibre, and two hundred rounds of ammunition to each gun. As late as Tuesday last on this extreme circuit of defence there were just ten men guarding these valuable works. JOHN MORGAN, with his forces, if he had chosen to make a diversion from his route to Cynthiana, could have reached those works in twelve hours, and the early dawn might have announced to the citizens of Cincinnati that a heavy tribute was demanded, or a notice been served to remove the women and children, as they were to be treated to a game of shot and shell.

JOSEPH A. SCOVILLE, the London Morning Herald correspondent, under the soubriquet of Manhattan, has been ordered before Gen. DIX. After being warned of the consequences which would follow any further mendacious and malicious representations of the affairs of the country, he was leniently allowed to depart on his parole.

A letter to the Chicago Journal, dated Kingston, Geo., June 1, states that a dispatch was recently received by Gen. SHERMAN, from Gen. GRANT, containing but three words—"Annihilate JOHNSTON'S army"—and another dispatch arrived May 31, not to advance on the enemy any further.

JOHN KELLY, a seaman, was yesterday committed for examination by United States Commissioner OSBORNE, on a charge of being concerned in a mutiny on board the ship Emily Augusta, while she was lying at the lower Narrows.

They had good news in New-Orleans, June 4. A dispatch from Baton Rouge, dated on that day, reads thus: "Grapevine report from outside, says Richmond surrendered to Gen. GRANT, June 1. The report comes from different parties, and is credited here."

Flour, Wheat and Oats were freely purchased yesterday, at firmer prices, as were also Pork, Lard, Cotton, Whisky and Petroleum. The movements in Oils, Metals, Hides, Hemp, Fish, Seeds, Spices, Fruit, Laths, Lime, Salt and Whalebone were restricted. The demand for Hay, Hops, Lumber, Chemicals, Rice, Coffee, Teas and Sugars was moderate, at, in the main, buoyant rates. Wool, Leather and Tobacco were in fair request. The freight market continued depressed, with 590 vessels of all classes in port.

The Flour market again left off dull yesterday. Money easy at 6@7 ₩ cent. Gold 196½@197, as on Tuesday. The news from Washington of the New Loan was anxiously looked for on the Street, but nothing very definite was known to the close of 'Change hour.

The Fruitlessness of Faction—Copperheadism Labor Lost.

A revolving squirrel cage is funny enough. But what sensitive nature can regard it without feeling a certain pity for the little animals within? Such ceaseless clambering, now here, and now there, and yet nowhere the gaining of so much as one poor inch! You may not care a button for les petites bêtes dedans; you may indeed reflect that they are classed as vermin, both by men of science and by plain farmers, and yet their fruitless efforts excite a vague commiseration. We confess to something of this feeling—aversion, and diversion, tinged with compassion—whenever we contemplate the little hopping writers and speakers inside of the Copperhead party. Truly they have a weary time of it—these scribbling and spouting demagogues—and all for nothing. The best they can do is to keep the party in a whirl. Not a jot of real progress is made. So it has been from the beginning.

At the start, the war spirit of the people was played upon. The attempt was made to advance the party by a clamor for a more strenuous prosecution of the war. And of all the attempts, probably this was the most promising. The war, beyond question, was feebly managed in its first stage. The people felt it. They became cold toward the Administration. They were inclined to trust the opposition, which laid claim to a more earnest spirit; and many thousands of votes were given the party by the sincerest war men. It was thus that HORATIO SEYMOUR was made Governor of this State, and it was thus that several State Legislatures were carried. But this method of advancing the party could not last. It was a deception, and the people soon saw it. The equivocal official language and acts of Gov. SEYMOUR, the amnesty movements made by the leaders of the party in the Legislatures of Illinois, Indiana and New-Jersey, and the tenacity with which the party clung to the feeble-willed MCCLELLAN as the leader of the operations against Richmond, made it clear that the party had no desire for "a more vigorous prosecution of the war." The party lost all the ground it had gained. But hard upon this followed another effort. The old national feeling was played upon. The cry of "the Union as it was" was raised. The Administration was committing itself to a policy of freedom. This, it was protested, was a breach of constitutional faith, and would destroy every chance of restoring the Union. But nothing was made by this. The people saw in Slavery the infernal cause of the rebellion, and welcomed any policy tending to its destruction. Then the old attachments to the great personal right of freedom of speech and to habeas corpus, were played upon. The people were told that the acts of the Administration in arresting men who gave aid and comfort to the rebels by word and act, was a subversion of every republican liberty. When the issue was made on that specific point in the case of VALLANDIGHAM, the people sustained the Government by an overwhelming majority. Then the natural aversion of every free people to conscription was played upon. The National Enrollment Law was denounced for its putting freemen on a level with serfs. And conjointly with this, the jealousies of the poor toward the rich were played upon. The three-hundred-dollar commutation clause was stigmatized as an atrocious distinction in favor of the men who had money. The passions of the ignorant portion of the people were so wrought up that they broke out in the terrible New-York riots. But it was all of no avail. The vast majority of the people sustained the Government measure. Then the old prejudices against color were played upon. The placing of black men in the military service to fight under the same flag as white soldiers, was treated as proof that the Government was against any political or social distinction between the races; the disgusting term "miscegenation," was invented to characterize the new policy of the Government. But the people treated all this balderdash with the derision it deserved, and gave their heartiest approval to the arming of colored men. Then the natural dislike of all people to heavy burdens of taxation was played upon. The expenses of the war were enormously exaggerated, and frightful pictures were drawn of the crushing ruin that must soon come. But the people went on paying their taxes and insisting upon war to the last extremity, with just the same fixed determination as ever. Then came a ridiculous tirade concerning the violation of the right of asylum in the case of the slave-trader ARGUELLES. It excited no attention. Then the fanfaronnade about the suspension of a couple of newspapers which had published a forged proclamation of the President. The people only whistled in contempt. In desperation it was tried to make something of the Cleveland Convention. The scurrility which had been poured out for years against FREMONT and WENDELL PHILLIPS, and the other leaders of that movement, was suddenly suspended; and they were lauded as true devotees of principle. But it was beyond the Copperheads to give any power for mischief to the crazy scheme. Falling back from that, they are now quite bewildered. They hardly know whether to make a new spring or not. It is not in their nature to keep quiet, and yet their utmost nimbleness amounts to nothing. Perhaps some new turn may be hit upon in their convention three weeks hence—that is to say, if they are not too much discouraged to hold their convention on the day appointed.

We wait with mingled curiosity and commiseration to see what the next move will be. Quite likely it will be very desperate and very droll. We have our suspicions; but Copperheads are at all times so uncertain that we won't venture to predict. It is enough to know that whatever new direction they may take, they will get no nearer to the power they covet. The great majority of the people are immovably against them. The popular resolution is to keep firm to this war until its original object is secured by the complete overthrow and unconditional submission of the rebels. Until the Copperheads can reach that mark, their efforts are all nugatory; and yet, it is a mark which cannot be reached without leaping from the party. The people will abide nothing but true loyalty; and true loyalty lies outside of Copperheadism.

The Army South of Richmond.

The official intelligence from Gen. GRANT'S army which we publish this morning effectually removes the mystery which has hung around its movements since the great battle of the Chickahominy. We are not only put in possession of the general fact of a change of base having been made from the White House to the James, but the details are supplied in so clear and intelligible a form that even those least familiar with the topography of Southeastern Virginia will be at little loss to comprehend the present position of the army.

On Sunday night the Eighteenth Army Corps, under Gen. SMITH, which, it will be remembered, was detached from BUTLER'S command, after the crossing of the Pamunky by the main army, took up its backward march from the left wing to the White House. There it embarked on transports, which were in readiness for its use, and was conveyed down the York River and up the James to City Point, which place its advance had reached at 2 o'clock on the afternoon of Tuesday.

Simultaneously with the commencement of SMITH'S roundabout, march WRIGHT'S and BURNSIDE'S corps took up their line of advance almost due South, crossing the Chickahominy at James Bridge—which we take to be identical with what is called "Jones' Bridge," on some of the maps, and which forms the crossing for the New Kent Court-house and Charles City road. To the last named place on the James River the advance movement of the two corps named appears to have been so timed that their arrival would only so far precede that of the Eighteenth, under SMITH, that the crossing of the river could be commenced by all the corps almost at the same time, namely, on Tuesday afternoon.

Meanwhile HANCOCK'S and WARREN'S corps, which had formed the right wing north of the Chickahominy, were ordered to advance across the river at Long Bridge, and thence to make a direct line to WILCOX'S on the James. Powhattan Point, it seems, was designated as the crossing place, and judging from the points of arrival designated in the dispatch, the extreme right and left of the army on the James could barely have been more than eight miles apart on Tuesday afternoon; a concentration the value of which may be partly comprehended from the fact, that in effecting the whole vast movement, Gen. GRANT was almost left unmolested even by cavalry skirmishing on his flank or rear.

It would be equally vain and useless to speculate on the future of this movement, or the promise which it gives of the commencement of decisive operations. We are safe, however, in assuming, from all we know of GRANT'S military tactics, that he will not be driven back from the line on which he now proposes to operate. If he needed precedents for his détour from the north bank of the Chickahominy to the south bank of the James, he might find them in the very earliest operations of the Allies in the Crimea. But it is fair to assume that Gen. GRANT is nowise fettered by precedents. Nay, if with an army and the matériel of an army at his command, to which modern warfare presents no parallel, Gen. GRANT is not himself every day creating precedents of the weightiest kind, it is safe to say he is committing the most ruinous of blunders. A mere military theorist, in his position, squaring every movement by the traditions or the records of the warfare of other nations and other epochs, would be about as wretched and as hopeless a stay and support to the national cause and the national faith in this crisis, as it is possible to conceive. The thing has been tried already, and the results have been defeat, humiliation, the invited sneers and scorn of faithless friends and open enemies.

The nation's faith in Gen. GRANT finds its prime sustenance in the conviction that he will not 'bout face, and make either for Harrison's Landing or the heights of Arlington, merely to sustain a theory, or open up a field for new military enterprise. The people rest assured that he has formed a purpose to strike the rebels hot, heavy and decisive blows in their stronghold, and with this assurance they are content, whether he makes his base on the Chickahominy or the Appomattox.

GERMANY AND DENMARK.—It will be seen from the European news by the Scotia, which we publish in other columns, that the conference on the Dano-German question makes no progress whatever. The German delegates demand that Flensburg and Duppel shall be surrendered by Denmark. The neutral Powers go for curtailing the Danish boundary only at the line of the Dannewerke. There are, however, no indications that Denmark will accept even the proposition of the intervening Powers, and taking this view, the London Times makes the declaration—which we take to be semi-official—that the Danes are right in believing that even non-intervening England and unsympathetic France can never allow Denmark to be blotted out of the list of nations.

A MERITED HONOR.—SECCHI DE CASALI, editor of L'Eco d'Italia, the Italian organ of this City, has recently received from the King of Italy the Order of St. Maurice, in acknowledgment of the valuable services he has here rendered his native land in his editorial capacity during the last fifteen years. This order in Italy is like that of the Legion of Honor in France.

Vallandigham's Movements—He Makes a Speech at Hamilton—The Convention Elects Him a Delegate to Chicago—Excitement among the People.

SECOND DISPATCH.

CINCINNATI, Wednesday, June 15.

VALLANDIGHAM arrived at Dayton at 5:30 o'clock this afternoon, and proceeded immediately to his residence. There was no demonstration. Rumors were current that soon after his arrival he had taken the night train for Toledo; but it was subsequently announced that he would deliver a public speech to-morrow. There is considerable apprehension of trouble at Dayton, and the people are very much excited.

THIRD DISPATCH.

VALLANDIGHAM made his appearance at the Democratic District Convention, held at Hamilton to-day, with apparent surprise to the larger portion of the assembly, and was received with great enthusiasm. He spoke briefly from a written document, narrating his arrest, and defending his action. He said the assertion of the President that he was arrested because he had labored with some effect to prevent the raising of troops, and encouraged desertions from the army and had disobeyed or failed to counsel obedience to lawful authority was absolutely false. He appealed for proof to any speech he had made, and to the record of the military commission, by the trial and sentence of which he was banished. The sole offence laid to my charge was words of criticism of the public policy of the Administration, addressed to open political meetings of my fellow-citizens. For more than one year no public man has been arrested or newspaper suppressed within the State for an expression of public opinion, while hundreds in public assemblies and through the press (with language and violence in which I never indulged) have criticised and condemned the acts and policy of the Administration, denounced the war, and maintained even the propriety of recognizing the Southern Confederacy. I do not mean any longer to be the only man of the party who is to be a victim to arbitrary power. If ABRAHAM LINCOLN seeks my life, let him so declare; but he shall not again restrain me of my personal liberty, except upon due process of law. He denounced Order No. 38, under which he was arrested, and said it was against the Constitution and laws, and without validity, and that all proceedings under it were null and void. The time has arrived when it behooves me as a citizen of Ohio and the United States to demand, and by my own act vindicate, the rights, liberties and privileges which I never forfeited, but of which for so many months I have been deprived." He reiterated his right to criticise the acts of the Administration, and cautioned his political friends from any acts of violence on his account, but advised none to shirk from any responsibility, however urgent, if forced upon him.

VALLANDIGHAM was accompanied to the depot by an enthusiastic crowd. He arrived at Dayton to-night, where it is understood he will make another speech.

The convention elected VALLANDIGHAM a delegate to the Chicago Convention.

The following is the Calendar for the Court of Appeals for Thursday, June 16: Nos. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 7, 17, 19, 20.

PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS.

SENATE.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, June 15.

PAY AND EMOLUMENTS OF CERTAIN OFFICERS.

Mr. WILSON, of Massachusetts, (Union,) from the Military Committee, reported favorably on the House bill to amend the sixteenth section of the act to define the pay and emoluments of certain officers of the army, &c., approved July 17, 1862. It places every contractor, or his agents, furnishing steamers, vessels, guns, munitions, clothing, subsistence or military and naval supplies of any kind on the footing of persons in the army and navy, and liable of trial by court-martial, to be punished by fine and imprisonment for any violation of law, or fraud, &c.

MILITARY INTERFERENCE IN ELECTIONS.

Mr. POWELL moved to take up the bill to prevent military interference in elections in the States, but the Senate refused by ayes 6, nays 26.

REPEAL OF THE FUGITIVE SLAVE LAW.

The bill to repeal the Fugitive Slave Law of 1850, and all acts and parts of acts for the rendition of fugitive slaves, was received from the House, when

Mr. SUMNER, of Massachusetts, (Union,) said he had been entrusted by the Committee on Slavery and Freedmen to ask its immediate consideration.

Messrs. HALE and POWELL objected, and

Mr. POWELL moved that the bill be referred to the Judiciary Committee. Rejected—yeas, 14; nays, 21.

The bill was then referred to the Committee on Slavery and Freedmen.

Mr. SUMNER then immediately reported it favorably without amendment, and asked its present consideration.

Mr. POWELL said as there had been no meeting of the committee, it could not be reported at this time.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Maryland, (Union,) said it was not necessary that there should be a formal meeting of the committee.

The Chair decided that the bill could be reported at this time, but could not be considered if objections were made.

Mr. POWELL and others objected.

GENS. SCHENCK AND BLAIR.

Mr. TRUMBULL, of Illinois, (Union,) from the Committee on Judiciary, reported upon the resolution of GARRETT DAVIS, and its substitute, upon the cases of Gens. SCHENCK and BLAIR, that so far as Gen. SCHENCK is concerned, no expression of opinion on the part of the committee, or action on the part of the Senate is demanded. Before the assembling of the Congress, to which he had been elected, he resigned his position in the army and has not since attempted to resume it. The case of BLAIR is different. He continued to hold the office of Major-General, but the committee express no opinion whether, continuing to discharge the duties of an office made incompatible with those of a member of Congress, would disqualify him for taking his seat. They quote the Constitution and precedent to show that the acceptance of the second vacates the first and deprecate the growing irregularity recently introduced of revoking resignations after their acceptance. They report the following resolution:

Resolved, That any officer of the United States whose resignation has been duly accepted and taken effect, or who having been elected a member of either House of Congress, qualifies and enters on the discharge of the duties of a member, is thereby in either case out of the office previously held, and cannot be restored to it without a new appointment in the manner provided in the Constitution.

THE NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE, of New-Hampshire, (Union,) introduced from the Naval Committee, a bill to repeal so much of the Naval Appropriation Bill as appropriates $25,000 to the Marine Hospital at Kittery Navy-yard. Referred to Naval Committee.

DISPOSAL OF COAL LANDS.

On motion of Mr. HARLAN, of Iowa, (Union,) the bill for the disposal of coal lands and town property in the public domain, was taken up and passed.

LAND GRANTS TO WISCONSIN.

The bill granting lands to Wisconsin to aid in building military roads was, on motion of Mr. DOOLITTLE, called up, and after debate, passed.

CIVIL ACTIONS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. FOSTER, of Connecticut, (Union,) from the Judiciary Committee, reported back the bill relating to Civil Actions in the District of Columbia, with amendments, which was ordered to be printed.

BUREAU OF FREEDMEN'S AFFAIRS.

The bill to establish a Bureau of Freedmen's Affairs then came up in order, the pending amendment being that of Mr. SAULSBURY.

Mr. SAULSBURY, of Delaware, (Dem.,) in supporting his amendment to the bill securing the constitutional rights of white persons, rejoiced that one portion of the dominant party had condemned the infringements which had been made upon the constitutional rights of white persons by the Administration.

Mr. HARLAN, of Iowa, (Union,) said the resolutions of Mr. SAULSBURY were identical with the words of the Constitution, and it would seem idle to reënact the words of the Constitution.

Mr. POWELL, of Kentucky, (Dem.,) contended that there was nothing improper at this time in reaffirming the time-honored principles of the Constitution.

Mr. TEN EYCK, of New-York, (Union,) would ask the Senator from Delaware (SAULSBURY) whether these amendments will amount to anything one way or the other?

Mr. SAULSBURY replied that it was always well to uphold and maintain the doctrines of civil liberty, as enunciated in the Constitution.

Mr. TEN EYCK rejoined that he did not think it necessary on every occasion to reaffirm, reënact and recapitulate the principles of the Constitution.

Mr. CARLILE, of Virginia, (Dem.,) moved to postpone the whole subject until December, which was rejected 23 against 13.

Mr. SAULSBURY'S amendment was rejected—ayes 8, nays 20.

Mr. GRIMES, of Iowa, (Union,) announced his determination to vote against the bill, at the same time avowing his determination to do everything in his power to elevate and improve the colored race. He opposed the bill in many of its details as being defective, contending that it conferred a most extraordinary power upon the commissioners who are to execute its provisions, they not being required to give bonds or be confirmed by Congress, and it also allows these commissioners to make the terms on which abandoned estates are to be cultivated. He said this bill inculcated the system of poor Slavery, and was in no way calculated to promote the interests of freedmen, and although he was sorry to differ from his friends, he would be obliged to vote against the bill, as to vote for it would be violate some of the fundamental principles of this Government.

Mr. SUMNER expressed his surprise at the course of Mr. GRIMES. He thought he had acted unnaturally in his course, and also in his course done the bill injustice. He defended the bill from what he considered the misrepresentations of the Senator from Iowa. He could well understand how the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. WILLEY) could oppose the bill, as all his instincts were in favor of slave-hunting and slavemongers; but he was not prepared for the opposition of the Senator from Iowa, who had always been found on the side of freedom and against the instincts of the slavemonger.

A long colloquy ensued between Messrs. SUMNER and WILLEY as to what constituted slave-hunting, the latter saying that if he would not be willing to carry out the provisions of the Constitution in reference to fugitive slaves, he would consider himself a perjured man, and worse than any slave-hunter that ever cracked a whip.

At 5 o'clock the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, June 15.

THE ANTI-SLAVERY AMENDMENT.

The House resumed the consideration of the constitutional amendment to abolish Slavery.

Mr. FARNSWORTH, of Illinois, (Union,) was surprised at the speech of his colleague (Mr. ROSS) last night. It was full of disparagement of the Administration and misstatements in regard to the manner in which the war had been carried on, while there was nothing in it reprehensive of the course of the rebels. The gentleman (ROSS) claimed that his party were the friends of the soldiers, but what was the course of the gentleman and his friends in regard to voting supplies? They invariably voted against granting either money or supplies for the soldiers. When a bill was introduced here the other day to punish guerrillas, those assassins who rob and murder soldiers and citizens, they opposed it. When the Constitution was framed there were but about 50,000 slaves in the land, and no one contemplated a permanent continuance of the institution. The greatest care was taken that no word should be incorporated in that instrument which recognized property in man. Our fathers expected that the institution would soon become extinct. He traced the increase and power of Slavery, and its enormous and increasing aggressions against the rights of free speech and free press, and the opposition which was excited against the institution by these aggressions. He cited statistics in order to show the relative progress in population and wealth of the Free and Slave States, showing the injurious effects of Slavery upon the progress and welfare of the community in which it exists. He thanked God that the manhood of the negro had been recognized by this nation. This they did when they placed the uniform of the soldier upon him.

Mr. THAYER, of Pennsylvania, (Union,) replied to the assertion of the gentleman from New-York (Mr. WOOD,) that Slavery was the best possible condition of the negro. He (THAYER) denounced the assertion as monstrous, infamous, barbarous and inhuman.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD, of New-York, (Dem.)—I reaffirm it.

Mr. THAYER—The gentleman (WOOD) reaffirms it. He has a right to the sentiment. He (THAYER) found no fault with him for expressing it. Let him and his friends go before the country upon it, if they dare. He (THAYER) did not intend to attempt a refutation of such an argument as that; he contented himself with denouncing it as barbarous and inhuman. Let him (WOOD) go to posterity with the record he made yesterday.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD—That was what I made it for. It was for posterity and not for the members of this House.

Mr. THAYER then proceeded to refute the argument of Mr. KALBFLEISCH yesterday, that there was no right to amend the Constitution in this manner. The principle that we could amend the Constitution only to restrict and not enlarge its powers, was subversive of every principle of liberty and destructive of every chance of improvement.

Mr. MALLORY, of Kentucky, (Dem.,) said: The calm reason of the country would bear him out in the opinion that this was a most inopportune and unfit time to make this amendment. Eleven States were not represented here; they were still States in the Union, notwithstanding the assertion of many gentlemen on the other side, that they were out of the Union and a foreign people. Mr. MALLORY replied to the argument that Slavery was incompatible with the existence of the Union, by citing Kentucky and Missouri as evidence that Slavery was not incompatible with fidelity and loyalty to the Union. The party in power had changed the war for the restoration and preservation of the Union, to a war for the destruction of Slavery, as they boldly avowed, as the only means of preserving the Union. President LINCOLN had said to him and others of the Kentucky Delegation to the last Congress, that the means which were being taken to bring back the seceded States were based upon the belief that there was a large number of people of those States in favor of the Union, but if it was established that these people were unanimous in favor of separation, the other States could not force them back into the Union. He (LINCOLN) had not acted upon this. He had violated the Constitution, and justified it upon the ground of necessity, and gentlemen said "yes, it is necessary," and regarded that as a sufficient reason for any outrage or violation of the Constitution. He (MALLORY) denounced the employment of negro soldiers, and indorsed the assertion of the gentleman from New-York, (FERNANDO WOOD,) that Slavery was the best possible condition for the negro race. He feared that the course pursued by the Administration had rendered the restoration of the Union impossible. He still hoped on, however, and would prosecute the war for that purpose, carrying offers of peace and forgiveness whenever the rebels would lay down their arms and return to their allegiance.

Mr. KELLY, of Pennsylvania, (Union,) advocated the adoption of the amendment upon the ground of justice and humanity. If the State of the gentleman from Kentucky (MALLORY) was scourged and desolated by war, it was because there was a God who avenged the wrongs of his children to the third and fourth generations. Let this amendment go to the people, and let them act upon it.

Mr. ARNOLD, of Illinois, (Union,) briefly advocated the passage of the resolution. He said this Congress would be glorified forever if they perfected and passed this measure.

Mr. INGERSOLL, of Illinois, (Union,) said the constituency whom he was proud to represent, were unalterably opposed to wrong and injustice, and in favor of justice and humanity everywhere. They have given largely of men and means to crush out the rebellion and destroy Slavery. Abolish Slavery and our old starry banner will be grander and higher than ever before. Hope will spring afresh in the hearts of the people. Other lands, when they see it, will yearn to be here, where they can enjoy blessings denied them forever on their native shores. It would seem that this resolution should be adopted by a unanimous vote, yet he feared we should lose it. The pockmark of Slavery was upon many members still upon the other side. Being slaves of slave power, we cannot expect much of them till we have made them free, and drawn away prejudices. They know that if Slavery goes down, the Democratic party goes down with it. There can be no objection upon loyal ground to an amendment of the Constitution in the manner prescribed by itself. Are you of the Opposition afraid to trust the people in this question? I believe you are. Slavery was the mother of the rebellion; destroy the mother, and the child must die.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, (Union,) opposed the passage of the resolution upon the ground that if we take this action, there can be no settlement of present difficulties, and it will aggravate and prolong the rebellion.

Mr. PENDLETON, of Ohio, (Dem.,) said that he approached this subject with diffidence, and that he believed in the constant progress of political science, and was anxious to answer its just demands, but that he was profoundly convinced that wise men would not touch lightly the organic law of a Government which had by the sparing exercise of very limited powers maintained civil order, and yet attained an unparalleled development of material prosperity amidst the enjoyment of permanent liberty to a degree hitherto unknown. For seventy-five years this Constitution has existed; for sixty its provisions have been unchanged. Three times has it been amended—once when the first Congress proposed amendments; again when in 1798 the power of the Supreme Court was limited, and once again to change the mode of electing the President. Not a single amendment has added to the powers granted to the United States, nor to those prohibited to the States. These sixty years have been eventful ones in our history. Three millions of people have become thirty. Our Western boundary, lost in the almost unknown Valley of the Mississippi, now dips into the Pacific Ocean. Spain, France, Mexico, on the South, have contributed to enlarge our domain. We have had war upon sea, and on the land. We have repelled invasion, and have tasted the triumphs of conquest. We have had partisan strife and sectional strife. The Constitution was sufficient for these things. The times have changed. A new party has come into power, and in the first term of its administration, in the midst of clashing arms, in the exhibitions of a civil war coincident with its advent to power, prepares to change the Constitution.

The question was then taken on the Senate joint resolution, which is as follows:

SECTION 1. Neither Slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

SEC. 2. Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

The joint resolution was rejected. Yeas, 94, nays, 65, two-thirds being necessary.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio, changed his vote to No, for the purpose of moving a reconsideration hereafter.

The vote is as follows:

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Wm. J. Allen, Ancona, Ashley, Baldwin of Michigan, Bliss, Brooks, Brown of Wisconsin, Chanler, Coffroth, Cox, Cravens, Dawson, Denison, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, English, Finck, Ganson, Grider, Harding, Harrington, Herrick, Holman, Johnson of Pennsylvania, Johnson of Ohio, Kalbfleisch, Kernan, King, Law, Lazear, Le Blond, Long, Mallory, Marcy, McAllister, McDowell, McKinney, Morris of Ohio, Morrison, Noble, O'Neill of Ohio, Pendleton, Pruyn, Radford, Randall of Pennsylvania, Robinson, Rogers, Robbins of Missouri, Ross, Scott, Steele of New-York, Steele of New-Jersey, Stiles, Strouse, Stuart, Sweat, Wadsworth, Ward, Chilton A. White, Joseph W. White, Fernando Wood—65.

The House then took a recess till 7.30 o'clock.

EVENING SESSION.

THE DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION.

The House concurred in the report of the Conference Committee on the disagreeing amendments to the Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation Bill.

The number of consular clerks is reduced to thirteen.

COLORADO ELECTION.

A bill was passed fixing the time of election for delegates to a Constitutional Convention in Colorado for the second Tuesday in September, instead of October.

MR. KNOX.

Mr. KNOX, of Missouri, (Union,) was sworn in as a member in place of Mr. BLAIR, of that State.

THE TAX BILL.

The House took up the Senate amendments to the Internal Revenue Bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, (Union,) said the Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in three hundred and ninety-four of the Senate's amendments, and non-concurrence in two hundred and forty two of them.

Mr. WASHBURNE, (Illinois,) wanted to know what the Committee did with the Senate's amendment striking out the tax upon whiskey on hand.

Mr. MORRILL replied that the Committee recommended the concurrence in striking out.

Mr. WASHBURNE said he would certainly ask a separate vote on that.

The House then proceeded to act on the amendments.

The amendment paying Assistant Assessors four instead of three and a half dollars per day, was concurred in, yeas 63, nays 54; and also the amendment giving Collectors in full compensation for their services and that of their deputies a salary of $1,500 per annum in addition to commissions.

The House now concurred in the Senate amendment altering the time at which the duty on spirits distilled or removed for consumption shall begin, and also amending the rates so that the subject may be adjusted by a Committee of Conference.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio, (Union,) entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Constitutional amendment abolishing Slavery throughout the United States was to-day rejected.

After acting on about fifty amendments, the House at 10½ o'clock adjourned.

The Turf.

THE GREAT TROT OF THE SEASON—UNPRECEDENTED ATTENDANCE AND INTENSE EXCITEMENT.

The visitors to the Fashion Course, yesterday, were counted by thousands, as we anticipated would be the case. It was a dense compact throng of swaying humanity. So intense was the excitement in all classes of society, concerning the meeting of the three trotting celebrities—Fillingham, Morgan, and Butler. It will be seen by the result which was not accomplished until darkness had set in, that the magnates of the trotting turf were all abroad, and the cognoscenti—so usually well posted—taken in. The late hour at which the final decision was arrived at, the utter impossibility of our giving space to the full and graphic report of a contest, which is a perfect novelty in trotting annals, compels us to confine ourselves to a summary of the result. Our report will appear in full to-morrow:

FIFTH HEAT.

Quarter, 00:37½; half mile, 1:19; mile, 2:31½.

The betting at starting was two to one on Fillingham against the field, and the pools sold averaged these prices. An immense amount of money changed hands. Fillingham was properly distanced by the judges in the third heat for foul driving and crowding Butler so close to the rails that there was no possibility of his getting out which enabled Morgan to pass the score first, Fillingham being ruled out most righteously by the judges and adjudged as distanced. The result of the race and the circumstances connected with it, will increase and culminate in the excitement which will inevitably take place on Wednesday next, when the same horses meet for the second mile-heat race to wagons.

INTERESTING CEREMONY AT WEST POINT

Dedication of the Site for the Battle Monument.

SPEECH OF GEN. McCLELLAN.

Yesterday afternoon the site for the proposed Battle Monument at West Point to the memory of the officers and privates of the regular army who have fallen in the war for the Union, was dedicated with appropriate ceremonies. The site selected for the monument is near the northern extremity of the grounds, and west of the hotel. Here a stand had been erected for the orator of the day. It was beautifully decorated with flags and other emblems of Union and nationality. On the stand were Brig.-Gen. ANDERSON, who presided; Maj.-Gen. McClellan, Gov. Seymour, Maj.-Gen. Gordon Granger, Maj.-Gen. Kilpatrick, Brig.-Gen. Meagher, Brig.-Gen. [illegible], Col. Bowman, Prof. Davis, and the Board of Visitors.

It was hoped that the venerable Gen. SCOTT would be present on this occasion, but the veteran soldier felt himself unable to undergo the fatigue of attending a public meeting.

The procession was formed about 1 o'clock, near the library, and proceeded to the stand, where its arrival was announced by the firing of a national salute. The meeting was opened by Gen. ANDERSON, who called upon Prof. FRENCH to offer prayer. At the conclusion of the prayer Prof. FRENCH said that he had been requested to beg the audience to refrain from applause, as the occasion was one of [illegible] solemnity and sacred interest to all the officers. The request was respected by the large assembly, numbering at least three thousand persons, although a slight attempt was made to applaud the orator when he came forward to deliver his address.

At the conclusion of the Professor's remarks the band played "Hail Columbia." Maj.-Gen. McCLELLAN was then introduced by Gen. ANDERSON. He spoke as follows:

SPEECH OF MAJOR-GEN. M'CLELLAN.

All nations have days sacred to the remembrance of joy and grief. They have thanksgiving for success, fasting and prayer in the hour of humiliation and defeat, triumph and poems to greet the living laurel-crowned victors. They have obsequies and eulogies for the warrior slain in the field of battle. Such is the duty we are to perform to-day. The poetry, the histories, the orations of antiquity, all resound with the clang of arms. They dwell rather upon the rough deeds of war than the gentle arts of peace. They have presented to us the names of heroes and the memory of their deeds even to this distant day. Our own Old Testament teems with the narration of brave actions and heroic deaths of Jewish patriots; while the New Testament of our meek and suffering Saviour often selects the soldier and his weapons to typify and illustrate religious heroism and duty. These stories of the actions of the dead have frequently survived in the lapse of ages the names of those whose fall was commemorated centuries ago. But, although we have not now the names of all the brave men who fought and fell upon the plain of Marathon, and in the pass of Thermopylæ, and on the hills of Palestine, we have not lost the memory of their examples. As long as the warm blood courses in the veins of man, so long as the human heart beats high and quick at the recital of brave deeds and patriotic sacrifices, so long will the lesson still incite generous minds to emulate the heroism of the past. Among the Greeks it was the custom that the father of the most valiant of the slain should pronounce the eulogies of the dead. Sometimes it devolved upon the great statesmen and orators to perform this painful duty. Would that a new Demosthenes or a second Pericles would arise and take my place to-day; for he would find a theme worthy of his most brilliant powers, of his most touching eloquence. I stand here now not as an orator, but as the whilom Commander of the most valiant dead—as their comrade, too, on many a hard-fought field against domestic and foreign foes, in early youth and mature manhood—moved by all the love that David felt when he poured forth his lamentations for the mighty father and son who fell on Mount Gilboa. God knows that David's love for Jonathan was no more deep than mine for the tried friends of many long and eventful years, whose names are to be recorded upon the structure that is to rise where we stand. Would that his more than mortal eloquence could grace my lips and do justice to the theme! We have met to-day, my comrades, to do honor to our own dead; brothers united to us by the closest and dearest ties, who have freely given their lives for their country in this war, so just and righteous, so long as its purpose is to crush rebellion and to save our nation from the infinite evils of dismemberment. Such an occasion as this should call forth the deepest and noblest emotions of our nature—pride, sorrow and prayer; pride that our country has possessed such sons; sorrow that she has lost them; prayer that she may have others like them, that we and our successors may adorn her annals as they have done, and that when our parting hour arrives, whenever and however it may be, our souls may be prepared for the great change. We have met and assembled to consecrate a cenotaph, which shall remind children's children in the distant future of their fathers' struggle in the days of the great rebellion. This monument is to perpetuate the memory of a part only of those who have fallen for the nation in this unhappy war. It is dedicated to the officers and soldiers of the regular army. Yet this is done in no class or exclusive spirit, and in the act we remember with reverence and love our comrades of the volunteers who have so gloriously fought and fallen by our side. Each State will no doubt commemorate in a more fitting way the services of its sons, who abandoned the avocations of peace and shed their blood in the ranks of the volunteers. How richly they have earned a nation's love, a nation's gratitude; with what heroism they have confronted death, have wrested victory from a stubborn foe, and have illustrated defeat, it well becomes me to say, for it has been my lot to command them in many a sanguinary field. I know that I but echo the feeling of the regular army when I award the high credit they deserve to their brave brethren of the volunteers. But we of the regular army have no States to look to for the honor due our dead. We belong to the whole country, and can neither expect nor desire the General Government to make a perhaps invidious distinction in our favor. We are few in numbers, a small band of comrades, united by peculiar and very binding ties; for with many of us our friendships were commenced in boyhood when we rested here in the shadow of the granite hills which look down upon us where we stand. With others the ties of brotherhood were found in more mature years, while fighting among the rugged mountains and fertile valleys of Mexico, within hearing of the eternal waves of the Pacific, or in the lonely grandeur of the great plains of the far West. With all, our love and confidence have been cemented by common danger and suffering, on the toilsome march, in the dreary bivouac, and amid the clash of arms, and in the presence of death, on scores of battle-fields. West Point, with her large heart, adopts us all—graduates and those appointed from civil life, officers and privates. In her eyes we are all her children, jealous of her fame and eager to sustain her world-wide reputation. Generals and private soldiers, men who have cheerfully offered our all for our dear country, we stand here before this shrine, ever hereafter sacred to our dead, equals and brothers in the presence of the common death which awaits us all—perhaps on the same field and at the same hour. Such are the ties which unite us—the most endearing which exist among men; such the relations which bind us together—the closest of the sacred brotherhood of arms. It has therefore seemed good, and it is fitting that we should erect upon this spot, so sacred to us all, an enduring monument to our dear brothers who have preceded us in the path of peril and of honor, which it is the destiny of many of us to tread. What is this regular army to which we belong? Who were the men whose death merits such honors from the living? What is the cause for which they have laid down their lives? Our regular or permanent army is the nucleus which, in time of peace, preserves the military traditions of the nation, as well as the organization, science and instruction indispensable to modern armies. It may be regarded as coeval with the nation. It derives its origin from the old Continental and State lines of the Revolution, whence, with some interruption and many dangers, it has attained its present condition. In fact, we may with propriety go even beyond the Revolution to seek the roots of our genealogical tree in the old French wars, for the Cis-Atlantic campaigns of the seven years' war were not confined to the "red men scalping each other by the great lakes of North America;" and it was in them our ancestors first participated as Americans in the large operations of civilized armies. American regiments then fought on the banks of the St. Lawrence and the Ohio, on the shores of Ontario and Lake George, on the islands of the Caribbean and in South America.) Louisburgh, Quebec, Duquesne, De [illegible] and Portobello attest the value of the provincial troops, and in that school were educated such men as WASHINGTON, PUTNAM, LEE, MONTGOMERY and GATES. These and men like [illegible], KNOX, WAYNE and [illegible], were the fathers of our permanent army; and under them our troops acquired that discipline and steadiness which enabled them to meet on equal terms, and often to defeat, the tried veterans of England. The study of the history of the Revolution, and a perusal of the dispatches of WASHINGTON, will convince the most sceptical of the value of the permanent army in achieving our independence and establishing the civil edifice which we are now fighting to maintain. The war of 1812 found the army on a footing far from adequate to the emergency, but it was rapidly increased, and of the new generation of soldiers many proved equal to the requirements of the occasion. Lundy's Lane, Queenstown, Plattsburgh, New-Orleans—all bear witness to the gallantry of the regulars. Then came an interval of more than twenty years of external peace, marked by many changes in the organization and strength of the regular army, and broken at times by tedious and bloody Indian wars. Of these the most remarkable were the Black Hawk war, in which our troops met unflinchingly a foe as relentless, and far more destructive than the Indians—that terrible scourge, the cholera; and the tedious Florida War, when for many years the Seminoles eluded in the pestilential swamps our utmost efforts, and in which were displayed such traits of heroism as that commemorated by your monument to DADE and his command, "when all fell, save two, without an attempt to retreat." At last came the Mexican war, to replace Indian combats and the monotony of the frontier service, and for the first time in many years the mass of the regular army was concentrated, and took the principal part in the battles of that remarkable and romantic war. Palo Alto, Resaca and Fort Brown were the achievements of the regulars unaided; and as to the battles of Monterey, Buena Vista, Vera Cruz, Cerro Gordo, and the final triumph in the Valley, none can truly say that they could have been won without the regulars. When peace crowned our victories in the capital of the MONTEZUMAS, the army was at once dispersed over the long frontier, and engaged in harassing and dangerous wars with the Indians of the Plains. Thus thirteen long years were spent, until the present war broke out, and the mass of the army was drawn in, to be employed against a domestic foe. I cannot proceed to the events of the recent past and the present without adverting to the gallant men who were so long of our number, but who have now gone to their last home—for no small portion of the glory of which we boast was reflected from such men as TAYLOR, WORTH, BRADY, BROOKE, TOTTEN and DUNCAN. There is a sad story of Venetian history that has moved many a heart, and often employed the poet's pen and painter's pencil. It is of an old man whose long life was gloriously spent in the service of the State as a warrior and a statesman, and who, when his hair was white and his feeble limbs could scarce bear his bent form toward the grave, attained the highest honors that a citizen could reach. He was Doge of Venice. Convicted of treason against the State, he not only lost his life, but suffered beside a penalty which will endure as long as the name of Venice is remembered. The spot where his portrait should have hung in the great hall of the Doge's palace was veiled with black, and there still remains the frame, with its black mass of canvas; and this vacant frame is the most conspicuous in the long line of effigies of illustrious Doges. Oh! that such a pall as that which replaces the portrait of MARINO FALIERO could conceal from history the names of those, once our comrades, who are now in arms against the flag under which we fought side by side in years gone by. But no veil, however thick, can cover the anguish which fills our hearts when we look back upon the sad memory of the past, and recall the affection and respect we entertained towards men against whom it is our duty to act in mortal combat. Would that the courage, ability and steadfastness they display had been employed in the defence of the "Stars and Stripes" against a foreign foe, rather than in the gratuitous and unjustifiable rebellion, which could not have been so long maintained but for the skill and energy of these, our former comrades. But we have reason to rejoice that upon this day, so sacred and so eventful for us, one grand old mortal monument of the past still lifts high his head amongst us, and should have graced by his presence the consecration of this tomb by his children. We may well be proud that we are here commanded by the hero who purchased victory with his blood near the great waters of Niagara, who repeated and eclipsed the achievements of CORTEZ; who, although a consummate and confident commander, ever preferred, where duty and honor would permit, the olive branch of peace to the blood-stained laurels of war, and who stands, at the close of a glorious and eventful life, a living column of granite against which have beaten in vain alike the blandishments and storms of treason. His name will ever be one of our proudest boasts and most moving inspirations. In long distant ages, when this incipient movement has become venerable, moss-clad, and perhaps ruinous, when the names inscribed upon it shall seem to those who pause to read them indistinct mementoes of an almost mythical past, the name of WINFIELD SCOTT will still be clear cut upon the memory of all, like the still fresh carving upon the monuments of long-forgotten Pharaohs. But it is time to approach the present. In the war which now shakes the land to its foundation the regular army has borne a most honorable part. Too few in numbers to act by themselves, regular regiments have participated in every great battle in the East, and in most of those west of the Alleghanies. Their terrible losses and diminished numbers prove that they have been in the thickest of the fights, and the testimony of their comrades and commanders show with what undaunted heroism they have upheld their ancient renown. Their vigorous charges have often won the day, and in defeat they have more than once saved the army from destruction or terrible losses by the obstinacy with which they resisted overpowering numbers. They can refer with pride to the part they played upon the glorious fields of Mexico, and exult at the recollection of what they did at Manassas, Gaines' Mills, Malvern, Antietam, Shiloh, Stone River, Gettysburgh, and the great battles just fought from the Rapidan to the Chickahominy. They can also point to the officers who have risen among them and achieved great deeds for their country in this war—to the living warriors whose names are on the nation's tongue and heart, too numerous to be repeated here, yet not one of whom I could willingly omit. But perhaps the proudest episode in the history of the regular army is the touching instance of fidelity on the part of the non-commissioned officers and privates, who, treacherously made prisoners in Texas, resisted every temptation to incite them to desert their flag. Offered commissions in the rebel service, money and land freely tendered them, they all scorned the inducements held out to them, submitted to every hardship, and when at last exchanged, avenged themselves on the field of battle for the unavailing insults offered their integrity. History affords no brighter example of honor than that of these brave men, tempted, as I blush to say they were, by some of their former officers, who, having themselves proved false to their flag, endeavored to seduce the men who had often followed them to battle, and who had naturally regarded them with respect and love. Such is the Regular Army—such its history and antecedents—such its officers and men. It needs no herald to trumpet forth its praises; it can proudly appeal to the numerous fields, from the tropics to the frozen banks of the St. Lawrence, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, fertilized by the blood and whitened by the bones of its members. But I will not pause to eulogize it. Let its deeds speak for it. They are more eloquent than tongue of mine. Why are we here to-day? This is not the funeral of one brave warrior, and even of the lament of death on a single battle-field; but these are the obsequies of the best and bravest of the children of the land, who have fallen in actions almost numberless, many of them among the most sanguinary and desperate of which history bears record. These men, whose names and deeds we now seek to perpetuate, rendering them the highest honor in our power, have fallen wherever armed rebellion showed its front—in far distant New-Mexico, in the broad Valley of the Mississippi, on the bloody hunting-grounds of Kentucky, in the mountains of Tennessee, amid the swamps of Carolina, in the fertile fields of Maryland, and the blood-stained thickets of Virginia. They were of all grades, from the General to the private, and of all ages, from the gray-haired veteran of fifty years' service to the beardless youth; of all degrees of cultivation, from the man of science to the uneducated boy. It is not necessary, nor is it possible, to repeat the mournful yet illustrious roll of dead heroes whom we have met to honor. Nor shall I attempt to name all of those who most merit praise—simply a few who will exemplify the classes to which they belong. Among the last slain, but among the first in honor and reputation, was that hero of twenty battles, JOHN SEDGWICK, gentle and kind as a woman, brave as a brave man can be, honest, sincere and able, he was a model that all may strive to imitate, but whom few can equal. In the terrible battles which just preceded his death, he had occasion to display the highest qualities of a commander and soldier, yet after escaping the stroke of death where men fell around him by thousands, he at last met his fate at a moment of comparative quiet, by the ball of a single rifleman. He died as a soldier would choose to die—with truth in his heart and a quiet, tranquil smile upon his face. Alas! our great nation possesses few sons like true JOHN SEDGWICK. Like him, too, fell at the very head of their corps, the white-haired MANSFIELD, after a career of usefulness illustrated by his skill and cool courage at Fort Brown, Monterey and Buena Vista; JOHN F. REYNOLDS and RENO, both in the full vigor of manhood and intellect; men who had proved their ability and chivalry in many a field in Mexico, and in this civil war, gallant gentlemen of whom their country had more to hope had it pleased God to spare their lives. LYON fell in the prime of life, leading his little army against superior numbers, his brief career affording a brilliant example of patriotism and ability. The impetuous KEARNY, and such brave Generals as RICHARDSON, WILLIAMS, TERRILL, STEVENS, WEED, SAUNDERS, and [illegible], lost their lives while in the midst of a career of usefulness. Young BAYARD, so like the most renowned of his name, that "though above fear and above reproach," was cut off too early for his country. No regiments can spare such gallant, devoted and able Commanders as RUSSELL, DAVIS, GOVE, SIMMONS, BAILEY, PUTNAM, and [illegible], all of whom fell in the thickest of the contest, some of them veterans, and others young in service, all good men and well beloved. Our batteries have partially paid their terrible debt to fate in the loss of such commanders as GREBLE, the first to fall in this war; Benson, Hazzard, Smead, Dr. Hart, Hazlett, and those gallant boys, Kirby Woodruff, Dimmick and Cushing, while the engineers lament the promising and gallant Wagner and Cross. Beneath remote battle-fields rest the corpses of the heroic McRae, [illegible], Stone, Sweet, and many other company officers. Besides these were hosts of veteran sergeants, corporals and privates, who had fought under Scott in Mexico, or contested with the savages of the Far West and Florida, and mingled with them young soldiers who, courageous, steady and true, met death unflinchingly without the hope of personal glory. These men, in their more humble sphere, served their country with as much faith and honor as the most illustrious Generals, and all of them with perfect singleness of heart. Although their names may not live in history, their actions [illegible] loyalty and courage will. Their memories will long be preserved in their regiments, for there were many of them who merited as proud a distinction as that accorded to the "first grenadier of France," or to that other Russian soldier who gave his life for his comrades. There is another class of men who have gone from us since this war commenced, whose fate it was not to die in battle, but who are nevertheless entitled to be mentioned here. There was SUMNER, a brave, honest, chivalrous veteran, who had confronted death unflinchingly on scores of battle-fields, had shown his gray head serene and cheerful where death most reveled, who more than once told me that he believed and hoped that his long career would end amid the din of battle—he dies at home from the effects of the hardships of his campaigns. That most excellent soldier, the elegant C. F. SMITH, whom many of us remember to have seen so often on this very plain, with his superb bearing, escaped the bullet to fall a victim to the disease which has deprived the army of so many of its best officers. JOHN BUFORD, cool and intrepid; MITCHELL, eminent in science; PALMER and many of the officers and men lost their lives by sickness contracted in the field. But I cannot close this long list of glorious martyrs without paying a soldier's debt of official duty and personal friendship. There was one dead soldier who possessed peculiar claims upon my love and sympathy. He was an ardent patriot, an unselfish man and true soldier—the beau ideal of a staff officer—he was my Aid-de-Camp—Col. COLBURN. There is a lesson to be drawn from the death and services of these glorious men which we should read for the present and future benefit of the nation. War in these modern days is a science, and it should now be clear to the most prejudiced that in the organization and command of armies, and the high combination of strategy, perfect familiarity with the theoretical science of war is requisite. To count upon success where the plans and execution of campaigns are intrusted to men who have no knowledge of war, is as idle as to expect the legal wisdom of a Story or a Kent from a skillful physician. But what is the honorable and holy cause for which these men laid down their lives, and for which the nation still demands the sacrifice of the precious blood of so many of her children? Soon after the close of the Revolutionary war, it was found that the confederacy which had grown up during that remarkable contest was fast falling to pieces from its own weight. The central power was too weak; it could only recommend to the different States such measures as seemed best, and it possessed no real power to legislate, because it lacked the executive force to compel obedience to its laws. The nation's credit and self-respect had disappeared, and it was feared by the friends of human liberty throughout the world that ours was but another added to the long list of fruitless attempts at self-government. The nation was evidently upon the brink of ruin and dissolution, when some eighty years ago many of the wisest and most patriotic of the land met to seek a remedy for great evils which threatened to destroy the great work of the Revolution. Their sessions were long and often stormy; for a time the most sanguine doubted the possibility of a successful termination to their labors. But from amidst the conflict of sectional interests, of party prejudices and of personal selfishness, their wisdom and conciliation at length evoked the Constitution, under which we have lived so long. It was not formed in a day, but was the result of patient labor, of lofty wisdom and of the purest patriotism. It was at last adopted by the people of all the States, although by some reluctantly, not as being exactly what all desired, but as being the best possible under the circumstances. It was accepted as giving us a form of Government under which the nation might live happily and prosper, so long as the people should continue to be influenced by the same sentiments which actuated those who formed it; which would not be liable to destruction from internal causes, so long as the people preserved the recollection of the miseries and calamities which led to its adoption. Under this beneficent Constitution, the progress of the nation was unexampled in history. The rights and liberties of its citizens were secure at home and abroad; vast territories were rescued from the control of the savage and the wild beast, and added to the domain of civilization and the Union. The arts and sciences and commerce grew apace; our flag floated upon every sea, and we took our place among the great nations of the earth. But under this smooth surface of prosperity, upon which we glided swiftly, with all sails set before the Summer breeze, dangerous reefs were hidden which now and then caused ripples upon the surface, and made anxious the more cautious pilots. Elated by success, the ship swept on, the crew not heeding the warning they received, forgetful of the dangers they escaped at the beginning of the voyage, and blind to the hideous maelstrom which gaped to receive and destroy them. The same elements of discordant and external prejudices, interests and institutions, which had rendered the formation of the constitution so difficult, threatened more than once to destroy it. But for a long time the nation was so fortunate as to possess a series of political leaders who to the highest abilities united the same spirit of conciliation which animated the founders of the Republic, and thus for many years the threatened evils were averted. Time and long continued good fortune obliterated the recollection of the calamities and wretchedness of the years preceding the adoption of the Constitution. Men forgot that conciliation, common interest and mutual charity, had been the foundation and must be the support of our Government, as is indeed the case with all governments, and all the relations of life. At length men appeared with whom sectional and personal prejudices and interests outweighed all consideration for the general good. Extremists of one section furnished the occasion, eagerly seized as a pretext by equally extreme men in the other, for abandoning the pacific remedies and protection afforded by the Constitution, and seeking redress for possible future evils in war and the destruction of the Union. Stripped of all sophistry and side issues, the direct cause of the war, as it presented itself to the honest and patriotic citizens of the North, was simply this: Certain States, or rather, a portion of the inhabitants of certain States, feared, or professed to fear, that injury would result to rights and property from the elevation of a particular party to power. Although the Constitution and the actual condition of the Government provided them with a peaceable and sure protection against the apprehended evil, they prepared to seek security in the destruction of the Government, which could protect them, and in the use of force against the national troops holding the national forts. To efface the insult offered to our flag; to secure ourselves from the fate of the divided republics of Italy and South America; to preserve our Government from destruction; to enforce its just power and laws; to maintain our very existence as a nation—these were the causes which impelled us to draw the sword. Rebellion against a government like ours, which contains the means of self-adjustment, and a pacific remedy for evils, should never be confounded with a revolution against despotic power, which refuses redress of wrongs. Such a rebellion cannot be justified upon ethical grounds, and the only alternatives for our choice are its suppression, or the destruction of our nationality. At such a time as this, and in such a struggle, political partisanship should be merged in a true and brave patriotism, which thinks only of the good of the whole country. It was in this cause and with these motives that so many of our comrades have given their lives, and to this we are all personally pledged in all honor and fidelity. Shall such devotion as that of our dead comrades be of no avail? Shall it be said in after ages that we lacked the vigor to complete the work thus begun? That after all these noble lives freely given we hesitated, and failed to keep straight on until our land was saved? Forbid it heaven, and give us firmer, truer hearts than that. Oh, spirits of the valiant dead, souls of our slain heroes, lend us your own indomitable will, and if it be permitted you to commune with those still chained by the trammels of mortality, hover around us in the midst of danger and tribulation—cheer the firm, strengthen the weak, that none may doubt the salvation of the Republic and the triumph of our grand old Flag. In the midst of the storms which toss our ship of State, there is one great beacon light, to which we can ever turn with confidence and hope. It cannot be that this great nation has played its part in history; it cannot be that our sun, which arose with such bright promises for the future, has already set forever. It must be the intention of the overruling Deity that this land, so long the asylum of the oppressed, the refuge of civil and religious liberty, shall again stand forth in bright relief, united, purified and chastened by our trials as an example and encouragement for those who desire the progress of the human race. It is not given to our weak intellects to understand the steps of Providence as they occur; we comprehend them only as we look back upon them in the far-distant Past. So is it now. We cannot unravel the seemingly tangled skein of the purposes of the Creator—they are too high and far-reaching for our limited minds. But all history and His own revealed word teach us that his ways, although inscrutable, are ever righteous. Let us then honestly and manfully play our part; seek to understand and perform our whole duty; and trust unwaveringly in the beneficent God who led our ancestors across the sea, and sustained them afterward, amid dangers more appalling even than those encountered by His own chosen people in their great exodus. He did not bring us here in vain, nor has he supported us thus far for naught. If we do our duty and trust in Him, He will not desert us in our need; firm in our faith that God will save our country, we now dedicate this site to the memory of brave men, to loyalty, patriotism and honor.

On the conclusion of the speech the band played "The Star-Spangled Banner" and "Yankee Doodle." The benediction was then pronounced by Rev. Dr. [illegible], and the audience dispersed.

The Battle Monument.

WEST POINT, N. Y., Wednesday, June 15.

There was a large and brilliant attendance here to-day, to witness the imposing ceremonies attendant upon the laying of the corner-stone of a monument to the memories of the heroes of the regular army who have fallen on the battle-field during the present war.

The ceremonies opened with a prayer, offered up by Rev. Dr. FRENCH.

Gen. McCLELLAN was then introduced to the vast assemblage, and delivered a brilliant oration, commemorative of the virtues, bravery, intelligence and worth of our gallant dead, concluding with a very touching and impressive tribute to their memory.

He was followed by another prayer by the Rev. Mr. [illegible].

Gov. SEYMOUR and Gens. GRANGER, [illegible], KILPATRICK, [illegible], HAUPT, HAYS, and other distinguished gentlemen, were present.

MUTINY AT SEA.

Conspiracy to Seize the California Steamer Ocean Queen—Two of the Ringleaders Killed.

The California steamship Ocean Queen, on her departure from this port for Aspinwall, on the 13th ultimo, took out 317 sailors, most of whom had been transferred from the army to the navy; and she had on board also about 500 passengers.

On the [illegible] day out [illegible] concerted to seize the steamer. There had been indications of trouble previous to this attempt, but the men failed to put their plot into execution.

It seems that these men had formed a plan to seize the steamship. Their first object was the killing of all persons who should oppose them, and the conspiracy included the running of the vessel, after her seizure, on their own account.

The intention of the mutineers was to take the vessel on the first night after her departure; but they had no engineer among their number who could work her engines.

Threats of violence had, however, been somewhat openly made, and there was much excitement on board.

On the day mentioned, under pretence that they wished to go into the first cabin, the mutineers attacked Capt. TINKLEPAUGH, who would not permit them to do as they desired.

This was a signal for a combined movement of the conspirators, and the men who were in the plot acted under the leadership of the most desperate of their number.

The ringleaders advanced upon the Captain and Commander AMMEN, of the navy, who had the sailors in charge.

The Captain, who had expected the difficulty and was prepared, aimed his revolver at the head of the foremost man, and warned him that if he advanced a step further he would lose his life.

The mutineer, with a horrible oath, called the Captain a coward, and daring him to fire, sprang forward. Capt. TINKLEPAUGH kept his word. The bullet from the weapon, which covered the ruffian's head, entered his brain, and he fell, almost instantly expiring.

The excitement among the passengers, many of whom were ladies, and also among the mutineers, was at this time intense. The latter rushed forward, and the mutineer who followed the first was fired at by Commander AMMEN, and by three or four officers, among whom was the chief-engineer of the Ocean Queen.

The short distance from which these officers fired, rendered their aim effective in every case, and the mutineer fell, pierced by five or six bullets.

Seeing that their plot was likely to fail, in consequence of the adequate preparations of the officers and crew to defend the vessel, the conspirators made no further efforts. A few minutes after their attack had failed, they were entirely quiet; their resolution was gone, and they were easily disarmed and put in irons.

There was no further trouble on board. The dead mutineers were thrown into the ocean, and the thirty or more men who were in irons were taken to Aspinwall, and across the Isthmus. Eight, however, escaped, and another was shot.

One of their number, who threatened to expose the plot, was thrown into the sea, on the second night out, by the mutineers, and as no alarm was made, the poor fellow was probably drowned.

VALLANDIGHAM.

He Returns to Ohio—Makes a Speech at Hamilton—A Defiance of the Government.

The NEW-YORK WEEKLY TIMES is published THIS MORNING, and may be had at the counter of the publication office, in wrappers, ready for mailing. Price FIVE CENTS.

In addition to the latest intelligence by telegraph up to the moment of going to press, there will be found in the current number full details of all military movements in the different departments, from the pens of our special correspondents. Also, all official orders, reports and documents, and the latest and fullest Washington news. European news, with graphic letters from our correspondents in London and Paris, giving the tone of public feeling abroad, is made a special and permanent feature. In addition to Editorials on all the current topics of the day, the WEEKLY TIMES has a page of carefully prepared commercial matter, giving the latest financial news and market reports; items of agriculture and domestic interest, compiled from sources many of which are otherwise inaccessible to the American reader; and marriages and deaths of the week.

The "WEEKLY RECORD," or news summary—being a careful synopsis and digest of the news of the day, both rebellion and general—is alone worth double the subscription price to the paper, as it preserves in a condensed and conveniently classified form all news of interest, and must prove valuable as a record to all time.

The WEEKLY TIMES will be sent to subscribers in any part of the country on the following terms: One copy one year, $2; three copies one year, $5; ten copies one year, $15; twenty copies one year, $25. Who is Mrs. Winslow?

As this question is frequently asked, we will simply say that she is a lady who, for upward of thirty years, has untiringly devoted her time and talents as a female physician and nurse, principally among children. She has especially studied the constitution and wants of this numerous class, and, as a result of this effort, and practical knowledge, obtained in a lifetime spent as nurse and physician, she has compounded a Soothing Syrup for children teething. It operates like magic—giving rest and health, and is, moreover, sure to regulate the bowels. In consequence of this article MRS. WINSLOW is becoming world-renowned as a benefactor of her race; children certainly do RISE UP and bless her; especially is this the case in this City. Vast quantities of the SOOTHING SYRUP are daily sold and used here. We think MRS. WINSLOW has immortalized her name by this invaluable article, and we sincerely believe thousands of children have been saved from an early grave by its timely use, and that millions yet unborn will share its benefits and unite in calling her blessed. No mother has discharged her duty to her suffering little one, in our opinion, until she has given it the benefit of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP. Try it, mothers—TRY IT NOW.—Ladies' Visitor, New-York City.

Where neglect is attended by results so dangerous, what can justify the careless indifference "of waiting for a cold to get well itself?" If those who are now troubled with Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Sore Throat, &c., would surely avoid the dreadful sufferings of the consumptive, let them take at once DR. D. MEDICAL.

PRIVATE DISEASES CURED IN THE shortest possible time, by DR. WARD & CO., No. [illegible] Lispenard-st., near Broadway, without the use of Mercury, loss of time or change of diet. Dr. WARD, from the hospitals of London, Paris and Edinburgh, is the discoverer of the only certain and reliable remedies for diseases of a private character. In 20 years' practice he has cured more cases of Secret Diseases and Wrong Treatment than all others combined. I can and will cure you in less time and at less expense than any other can or will, and those who have been robbed of their money and health, call; it will take but little money and time to restore you. If you have been unfortunate, call at once. By his special experience in this much neglected branch of medical science, he is enabled to guarantee a cure in the most complicated cases. Recent cases of Gonorrhoea or Syphilis cured in a few days, without change of diet or hindrance from business. Secondary Syphilis—the last vestige eradicated without the use of Mercury. Involuntary emissions stopped in a short time. Sufferers from Impotency, or loss of sexual power, restored to full vigor in a few weeks, permanently and speedily cured by a new treatment. Persons at a distance failing to receive prompt treatment elsewhere, may get a permanent cure effected by writing a full diagnosis of their case, addressed to Dr. WARD, No. [illegible] Franklin-st. Call, send, or write.

$1,000 FORFEITED AND NO CHARGE UNLESS CURED.—Dr. Hunter's Red Drop cures venereal disease when regular treatment and all other remedies fail; cures without dieting or restriction in the habits of the patient; cures without the disgusting and sickening effects of all other remedies; cures in new cases in less than six hours; cures without the dreadful consequent effects of mercury, but possesses the peculiarly valuable property of annihilating the rank and poisonous taint that the blood is sure to absorb unless this remedy is used. This is what he claims for it, and what no other will accomplish. Its value in this respect has become so well known that scientific men, in every department of medical knowledge, begin to appreciate it; for hardly a week passes that he is not consulted by druggists, chemists and physicians in regard to some pitiful patient who has exhausted the whole field of the faculty, and still the disease will appear. It is $5 a vial, and cannot be obtained genuine anywhere but at the old office, No. 3 Division-st., New-York City, since 1834. Eight separate rooms and a private entrance. A ten cent bill will secure the Monitor of Health by return mail.

AFFLICTED RESTORED—IGNORANCE EXPOSED—FALLACIES UNMASKED.—Highly important to both sexes, married or single, in health or disease. D., No. 61 Franklin-st., between Broadway and Elm-st., New-York.

The practitioner will find it abounding in valuable hints, and the general reader will come across many useful cautions and premonitory warnings."

From the Boston Medical and Surgical Journal.

"Dr. Dixon has written much and well on various branches of surgery; his book shows a thorough acquaintance with modern practice; stricture, varicocele, hydrocele and fistula are particularly well treated of. Indeed, he has managed to secure attention to every page in this volume, an art that few medical writers possess.

"The author's acknowledged originality and thorough devotion to the rational principles of medicine, and his ingenuity under trying surgical circumstances, stamp it with more than ordinary interest."—London Lancet.

MUSICAL.

CHICKERING & SONS

MANUFACTURERS OF GRAND, SQUARE, AND UPRIGHT PIANO-FORTES, No. 652 BROADWAY.—The superiority of these instruments has of late been amply demonstrated by the voluntary testimony of the foremost artists of the day, who claim for them excellence of tone and workmanship hitherto unobtained by any other makers.

Mr. GOTTSCHALK'S constant use of the NEW SCALE CHICKERING GRAND PIANO-FORTES has severely tested their musical qualities, and resulted in establishing the justice of the very flattering estimation in which they are held.

STEINWAY & SONS'

GOLD MEDAL GRAND AND SQUARE PIANOS are now considered the best in Europe as well as this country, having received the first Prize Medal at the World's Exhibition in London, 1862.

The principal reason why the Steinway Pianos are superior to all others, is, that the firm is composed of five practical pianoforte makers, (father and four sons,) who invent all their own improvements, and under whose personal supervision every part of the instrument is manufactured. Warerooms, Nos. 71 and 73 East 14th-st., between Union-square and Irving-place, New-York.

MASON & HAMLIN'S CABINET ORGANS FOR FAMILIES, CHURCHES AND SCHOOLS—Recognized by the musical profession as greatly superior to Harmoniums, Melodeons and all other small organs. (See our illustrated catalogue for explicit testimony to their superiority, from a majority of the most eminent organists in America.) Prices, $85 to $600 each.

CAUTION TO PURCHASERS.—The great reputation which our Cabinet Organs have obtained, and the extensive demand for them, have induced dealers to advertise, in some cases, quite different instruments as Cabinet Organs, and in others to represent to purchasers that Harmoniums and other reed organs are the same thing. This is not true. The excellences of our Cabinet Organs, which have given them their high reputation, are the result not merely of the superiority of their workmanship, but also, in large measure, of essential differences in construction, which, being patented, cannot be imitated by other makers. From these arise their better quality and volume of tone and unrivaled capacity for expression. Warerooms in New-York, No. 7 Mercer-st.

THE UNION CAMPAIGN.

more distant zone, but here, within the very States of the American Union—and when the people, whether arrayed at the ballot-box or marshaled on the field of battle, shall bear upon their banners the glorious and inseparable watchwords—"LIBERTY AND NATIONALITY."

Resolved, That in the judgment of this meeting, the convention could have taken no course so certain to give effect to their platform of principles, as in making the nominations which they have presented to the country. These nominations are invincible, because they have been first made by the popular voice. American history may be searched in vain for an instance of more remarkable unanimity than that with which the "plain" and patriotic people of the United States have demanded the reelection of ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

Resolved, That it was fit and proper that our National ticket should bear evidence of the sympathy and respect with which Unionists in the North regard those who have endured sacrifices and sufferings for their flag and country in the South. Their heroic devotion not only honors the American character, but exalts human nature itself. We are glad that in making this recognition, the convention has selected one who illustrates, in his own history, what patriotism and statesmanship may be of humble origin; one who, though representing a slave State, was the advocate of free homes; and one who dared, amid the madness of secession and treason, to give, in the Senate, for the Constitution and the Union, the voice and vote of ANDREW JOHNSON, of Tennessee.

The President then introduced Hon. HENRY J. RAYMOND, Chairman of the New-York Delegation to the Baltimore Convention.

Mr. RAYMOND said:

SPEECH OF HON. HENRY J. RAYMOND.

MR. CHAIRMAN AND FELLOW-CITIZENS: While I am indebted to you, one and all, for the opportunity of presenting myself to address a few remarks to you this evening, I am glad that my effort will be limited by the capacity in which I appear before you. I had the honor to be one of the delegates in the Baltimore Convention from this State. I propose to do nothing more than report to you what that convention did. I am met at the outset by an embarrassment growing out of the trivial circumstance that you know already a great deal more about it than I do myself. The action of that convention has been so widely spread before the country that nothing new can be said of it that would be true; and considering the vigilance and activity of those veracious and ubiquitous chroniclers of the day, the opposition press, nothing now remains to be said of that convention that is untrue. [Loud laughter.] I certainly supposed at the time I was there, that I knew a great deal of what was going on; but I have lived to find out my mistake. I find on reading the reports, the letters and the editorial commentaries of the papers to which I allude, that they knew a great deal more than anybody I encountered at the convention, not only of what the convention did, but of what each individual member did, said and thought. For my own part I have been perfectly astonished to find how many things I did that I never dreamed of, how many things I said I never thought of saying, and how many most intricate, complicated and far-reaching motives I had for what I thus did and said, and of which I am not in the slightest degree capable. [Laughter.] I found that I was engaged in a score of intrigues there that I knew nothing about until I got here. I have learned that I was the mouthpiece of the President, whom I didn't suppose would seek a mouthpiece anywhere, and certainly not from so humble a person as myself. I found I was obeying the dictation and carrying out the orders of many distinguished men in the Cabinet, and a great many more who wanted to get in it. If I had known what their orders were, and what their dictation would be—if they had condescended to inform me, perhaps I would have endeavored to have carried out their orders and dictation, and perhaps I would not. I cannot tell until I try. But it is a consolation to know that somebody is supposed to have approved of what was said and done, and it is taken for granted that they adopted it. If I should proceed to tell you the truth, after all that has been told you by these newspapers, I should be quite prosaic. There might be novelty that would attract your attention for a moment. Still, it may be worth while to say a few words about the general character of the convention. I shall not enter into detail as to its particular action. I think, then, that I can say, and be borne out in the statement by all those who were present and participated in its action, that it was the most thorough popular convention that ever assembled on this continent—[applause]—by which I mean that it more thoroughly and more completely represented the people of the United States, with less interference from official or any other authority, with less intrigue in the election of its delegates than any convention that was ever seen on this continent. [Applause.] That, I am sure, will strike you as a novelty, after reading the newspapers I have alluded to. They have told you that its peculiarity was that every man in it was an office-holder, sent there to do the bidding of the man who appointed them. I happen to know something about the process by which some of the delegates to that convention were elected. So far as my observation went, the office-holders didn't interfere at all, or if they did, they interfered against us. I think I can name counties where every single office-holder opposed the delegates to that convention, and the reason was, sir, that the convention represented the people, and not the office-holders. The men who were sent there did the bidding of the people, and of nobody else. The people had made up their minds what they wanted done, and they sent men whom they knew would do it. In the next place, I may safely say that it was the most united convention I ever saw—united in sentiment, united in a common purpose and common object, united in spirit, and, above all and overbearing everything else, united in the determination, come what might, no matter what sacrifice might be required, this Union should be preserved. The only possible difference that could have arisen in a convention thus constituted was as to the best means to be adopted for the attainment of the common end. Every man there felt a necessity of doing everything in his power to bring about that common end, and to secure the accomplishment of that common object. I think I may safely say, also, that it was a convention controlled by no party—by no clique; that it was under the leadership of no man representing any party interest or aim, and had no party or selfish object whatever. You all know that men of all parties, who believe in putting down this rebellion with force, were invited to send delegates thereto represent them. They came there. One of the most distinguished members of that convention (and I mention the circumstance simply as one fact illustrating how thoroughly all parties were represented,) Gov. TOD, of Ohio, told me that he counted in his immediate vicinity thirty delegates who sat with him in the Charleston Convention in 1860. [Prolonged applause.] Neither was it a convention of radicals or conservatives as against each other. It was a convention of no clique—it was a convention of the people, to which all cliques, all parties, all sections, and all sentiments, less than the common sentiment of nationality, were directly and completely subordinate. There were radicals there, and there were conservatives there. Perhaps the most radical men there were, after all, the most conservative, and I am quite sure that the most conservative men felt like adopting the most radical means to put down this rebellion. [Applause.] There has been a technical distinction drawn between conservatism and radicalism in this great contest, which I think has no existence in fact. You will see how thoroughly it was ignored when I recall to your recollection circumstances connected with the action of the convention. You remember there were contesting delegations sent from the State of Missouri, one conservative, and the other radical. That convention voted almost unanimously to admit as the representatives of the loyal men of Missouri the delegation as the radicals. And immediately after and against the vote of these men, thus admitted, they voted with almost equal unanimity to admit the delegations from Tennessee, Arkansas and Louisiana. There was no predominance of party spirit, no area for the action of any clique of any kind or condition. It was felt that whoever was there for the Union, and was prepared to take all the measures necessary for its preservation, had a right to do business there, and he was admitted to the floor to do it. [Applause.] It was thoroughly and entirely a Union Convention. It could not be made to believe in secession, whether the secession was South or North. It could not be made to believe that the ordinances of secession passed by some of the Southern States had any more validity in fact or in law, than the blank paper upon which they were written. It could not be made to believe that Tennessee was out of the Union; nor could all the eloquence, all the argument, and all the intrigue, if you please, supposed to have been concentrated in that convention, could have convinced them that ANDY JOHNSON was an alien enemy. [Applause.] It was a convention that aimed at practical action—to take things as they found them; and it was determined to make use of all means to crush the rebellion, and to restore over every foot of this territory the permanent supremacy of the Constitution of the United States. [Applause.] In one other respect that convention, which, I think, should commend itself to the confidence and respect of the people of this country. It adopted a platform of principles representing the sentiments of the people of this country as thoroughly and exactly as those sentiments could be ascertained. Not a platform of principles held last year—not to be held next year—but held now by the great body of the people. It was a convention of this year and for this year—not going back to the issues and divisions of the past, not going forward to the sanguine anticipations of some, or the gloomy anticipations of others, in the future, but taking the American people as they are to-day, with their sentiments, their principles, their positions, and making use of those sentiments, those principles and those positions to effect the great object of the convention assembling—the salvation of the American Union. [Prolonged applause and cheers.] There is a great deal said about the necessity of taking ground in advance of the people. Great credit is sometimes taken by individuals for what has transpired. They will say, "I knew two years ago that we had got to do this or to do that; if the country had only done it then, we would have been all right now." Fellow-citizens, that is not the way in which great communities work. The salvation of the country, like all great ends of statesmanship, is a practical thing, to be done by the adoption of practical means, and those means must be adapted to the emergencies of to-day, and not to the requirements of next year or the year after. Those requirements, when they come, will find their own means and their own instrumentalities; and they will find the people right, for whatever may be demanded of them. According to my experience, the man who is about two or three years ahead of his age is just about as bad off, for all practical purposes, as a man who is two or three years behind his age. He is acting for himself in a sphere of his own. He goes so far that he can only act for himself; and he forgets that he has cut off from the hearty coöperation and aid from the mass of the community surrounding him who have to be educated up to his march. That is a very good thing to do, but he loses the opportunity of making a practical use of them in what they are ready for at the time. So it has been in all the great revolutions of the world. In civil wars particularly, no man knows what may be required next year. In foreign wars, waged by one nation against another, there is generally some definite object in the war. It is commenced for that. All the nation had to do is to prosecute the war until that one object is attained. All need of public sentiment is to put that sentiment on that one object steadily, so as to give support to the Government in its necessity. But in civil wars, all this is different. New elements, new motives, new necessities come into play every month of the great controversy. Look at the history of civil wars everywhere. I will refer to but one or two by way of illustration. Take the revolution in England which commenced in 1640, and ended in 1688. It began by challenging the right of the king to collect a tax in the inland counties called ship money, for the purpose of building ships. They denied the right of the king to impose that tax. JOHN HAMPDEN, although one of the wealthiest noblemen in England, refused to pay that ship money, which amounted to 20s. 6d., and from that an issue was raised with the King on that particular point. But before the war had gone on for six months the issues had extended, and the question then raised was whether he had a right to lay taxes at all without the consent of Parliament. But there was no stopping it then. Then came up the question whether the King or Parliament was supreme, and the assertion of the right of Parliament to supervise the action of the King, and it ended with the people determining that the King's head should answer the question, and that there should be no King thereafter in England. So it went on until it reached that great conclusion. Then began the ebb, and there was a King again, and monarchy was finally established there. Take the French revolution, the same cycle was gone through with there again. First, it was a contest between the nobility and the common people for their rights. Next it assumed an opposition against the King, and after going through five or six successive parties, each one being the victim of the one succeeding, it finally ended in the destruction of King, nobility, and the old order of things in the French empire. Our own revolution illustrates the same fact. You know that SAMUEL ADAMS from the beginning of the agitation against the laws of England insisted that we must strike for independence of England. He preached that doctrine early and late with eloquence, power and energy, conveying conviction to hundreds of minds. Yet less than two years before our Declaration of Independence the Congress of these Colonies then assembled, in addressing a memorial to Parliament, used this language:

"You have been told that we are seditious, ambitious, impatient of government and are desirous of independence. Be assured that these are not facts, but calumnies."

Less than one year before the Declaration of Independence, in October, 1774, GEORGE WASHINGTON, writing to a private friend in England, Capt. MCKENZIE, used this language:

* * "Although you are taught that the people of Massachusetts are rebellious, setting up for independency, and what not, give me leave, my good friend, to tell you, that you are abused, grossly abused. * * Give me leave to add, and I think I can announce it as a fact, that it is not the wish of that Government, or any other upon this continent, separately or collectively, to set up for independence. * * I am well satisfied that no such thing is desired by any thinking man in all North America; on the contrary, that it is the ardent wish of the warmest advocates for liberty, that peace and tranquillity, upon constitutional grounds, may be restored, and the horrors of civil discord prevented."

This was true at the time, to a certain extent. WASHINGTON then represented to a very great degree, the predominant feeling of the American people, but less than one year after that, the American people, too, changed their minds, and then the cry was unanimously for independence, and GEORGE WASHINGTON was the very man selected to achieve it for them. I mention these circumstances simply to show we must not make the standard for to-day the rigorous and inflexible rule for to-morrow, and still less must we hold a man responsible for not having done two or three years ago what we now see was absolutely indispensable. Our own rebellion has gone through the same cycle of opinion—the same mutations of public sentiment. When it began, who supposed it was going to wrap this whole continent in the flame of civil war? Who supposed that we should be here at the end of the third year of the war, with almost every one of us mourning for the loss of a friend, and looking forward to still greater efforts for the future, and nerving our hearts for whatever may come, for whatever bereavement may be necessary to secure the end. It is very easy to say now, "I knew it would be a great war, and if the President has called out 500,000 men it would have soon been ended." If he had called out 500,000 men, would he have been believed to be in his senses by the great majority of men? I do not speak of men wiser than he. There are some men who saw things from the beginning, especially when the end comes, or at least they try to convince everybody else that they did. What we want is that we shall keep step with the march of public sentiment. We need for those who are leading this great nation in this contest, not men to dictate to the people what they are to do to-day, but to take the sentiment of to-day as the guide for to-day, and be prepared for the advanced sentiment of to-morrow, and to make good use of that. [Loud applause.] I think, too, that the convention in its next act did exactly the right thing, and that was the nomination of ABRAHAM LINCOLN as President of the United States. [Prolonged cheers and applause.] I am not going to mince matters. I shall talk to you here as free as I would to you as individuals. I know what you know very well, that Mr. LINCOLN is not one of the chivalric heroes of the imagination, who bestrides his horse, and lays down law to all creation to come up to and to make himself a dictator of the sentiment as well as a guide to the action of the American people. He has never attempted to do such a thing as that. In his first message that he sent to Congress, he said what he has stood by from that day to this, that this rebellion was to be put down by the people of the United States—that it was the people who were to save this Union and that they would do it if those whom they put in power to be their executors would seek to execute their task indifferently well. It is true that this war which the people are carrying on for their salvation and for the salvation of the Government which is dearer to them than life itself, and for which they are prepared to sacrifice everything that makes life valuable. But I say that there is no man on this continent, who, to the best of my judgment, so thoroughly and entirely embodies in his action, judging from the past three years, this public sentiment whatever it may be at this moment, and wields his energies so effectually, as ABRAHAM LINCOLN. [Applause.] I conceive it a piece of special good fortune that we have for President this moment, to carry us through this second great revolution and the greatest that has yet taken place on this continent; a man who, from the crown of his head to the sole of his feet, in every word, in every pulsation of his heart, and in every experience of his life, so thoroughly, entirely and exclusively an American. [Applause.] He is a man who is thoroughly saturated with American sentiments and American principles—a man who never saw a foreign court, who never put his foot upon a foreign shore—a man who stands by the people as one of the people, breathing their breath and living their life, having gone through their experience, knowing what they feel, and knowing, as he does, the sincerity of their hearts and the fullness of their devotion to American principles. [Applause.] After this war had been going on about a year, you all remember that the hearts of a great many people waxed faint at the prospect before them. Mr. LINCOLN had not shown then as fully as he has done since his thorough adaptation to the crisis upon which his lot was cast. I happened to be in Washington at the time, and heard a remark made by one of the most distinguished members of the Government, (I don't feel at liberty to call his name,) in a private circle, at which the general tone of remark was in disparagement of the President. The gentleman listened to the whole discourse and then said: "Well, gentlemen, I beg to make a remark to which I suppose you will not assent. I suppose, said he, first, that you all believe that WASHINGTON was raised up by a special Providence to carry our country through the war for our independence." They all said, "Yes, they had no doubt of it." Said he, "Well, I have made it my business to study the character of ABRAHAM LINCOLN. I have done it thoroughly. I believe I appreciate it; I think I understand his weaknesses and his strength; I believe that I know every element that enters into his management of public questions, and I tell you to-day, as the result of that study, what you will not now believe, but which you will believe one year from to-day, and what the great body of the people will believe before his first term is over, that ABRAHAM LINCOLN was as truly raised up to carry this country safely through the perils of this rebellion as WASHINGTON was to carry us through our revolution; [applause,] and I believe that events will justify that sagacious and just remark. One thing more that the Baltimore Convention did, and it is the only one that I shall allude to now: they nominated ANDREW JOHNSON for Vice-President. Aside from his own character, which entitled him to the confidence of the American people, they were moved by two grounds in making this nomination. In the first place, as you all know, the Union party is made up of the loyal men of all other parties, and you know also that from no other quarter has there come to the Union cause more hearty, patriotic and effective aid than from the old Democratic party. That convention believed that it was proper and just, as well as expedient, to select a candidate for the Vice-Presidency from that party—the War Democrats who are now acting with the Union party, and in looking over this broad land for the man who most thoroughly was imbued with the spirit of that party; who began the earliest, and stood the foremost; who had worked the hardest and sacrificed the most, they could find no man better entitled to the confidence of the American people than ANDREW JOHNSON, of Tennessee. Another reason which led them to select him, was that he lives in Tennessee, and that he was the representative not only of the War democracy, but of the Southern loyalists. [Applause.] I know that in some quarters it is quite fashionable—because loyal men in the South have not adopted, in past years, the radical notions that prevail in those quarters—to sneer at the loyalty of those noble Southern men. They seem to think that their loyalty was only half way, because they did not come up to our standard of opinion in regard to the war. But I think that the convention agreed that if there was any one class of men on this continent who had sacrificed more for the salvation of the Union and to turn back the tide of rebellion, they were that class of men who, living in States which had pretended to secede, had yet stood firm by the flag of their country and the Constitution. [Applause.] And when the convention looked upon the sacrifice these men had made, when they saw their fortunes had been wrecked, their property plundered, their homes destroyed, their social position sacrificed—that they had gone as through a red sea of fire and brimstone, their hearts could not resist the conviction that to turn their backs upon them would be almost as great a crime as it was in the States to turn their backs upon the Union and Constitution which our fathers gave us. There is this consideration that impresses itself upon my mind forcibly. We find men in those States who have always stood by the United States, and by its Constitution and laws, and they insist that they will do so until the end of their days. As one of them ROBERT J. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, [applause,] expressed the sentiment, "We shall walk with you in the path of the Union to our death, if need be; help us if you can, but if you cannot, believe in your hearts that we died like men." [Applause.] I cannot think of the men who, in the Southern States, have there stood battling for our Union, to the sacrifice of every comfort, without being ashamed that any thought should ever enter into a Northern heart to the disparagement of their loyalty and to their claims being considered as American citizens. [Applause.] Now taking a more practical and less sentimental view of the subject, I say that these men in the Southern States tried hard to sustain the Government of the United States. They sought to be admitted in our councils that they might help us, and join with us in upholding and strengthening the arm of the Government, to which their lives have been and ever will be devoted. We had three alternatives. We could either send them back, saying "You do not belong here—you belong to JEFF. DAVIS, you must go to his conventions and his counsels;" or we might have said to them, "You may go to Chicago, and they will take you there, and you can by that means get half way to JEFF. DAVIS." But I for one would desire to have them side by side with us to sustain our Government, [applause,] and I deem it one of the wisest, noblest and most patriotic acts which that convention did, that they did not turn their backs upon those men, but gave them the right hand of American fellowship.

Mr. RAYMOND concluded his remarks by an eloquent appeal to the loyal men to support the nominations which had been thus so auspiciously made for the coming campaign.

SPEECH OF EX-GOVERNOR WRIGHT.

Ex-Gov. WRIGHT was eulogistically introduced by the President, and spoke substantially as follows:

He said that about three years ago he was standing by the grave of LAFAYETTE in the City of Paris, and this question was asked by one of the mourners present: Shall the labors of LAFAYETTE be lost? Now he asked the meeting shall the labors of our Fathers of the Revolution be lost? [Cries of "No—never!"] We are now on the eve of a popular election, and it behooves us to answer the momentous question: Shall we prosecute the war and successfully experience a political revolution at the same time? It is a new question, and we must forget all party names and organizations. [Applause.] Heretofore, party has been opposed to party; but the people, in the minority of the North, have always, after elections, declared, "We will meet you at the ballot-box at the next election." In 1860 the minority of one section, however, resorted to the cartridge-box, and in the present political campaign it behooved every man to aid in restoring order, in giving peace and harmony to the people, and in reforming all errors through the ballot-box. It becomes every man, also, to forget party names, and everything but the only question of putting down the rebellion, let the cost be what it may. [Great applause.] For his platform he would take MADISON's sentiment, that error can be tolerated if reason is only left free to combat it. All he asked at the end of the war was, that there might be no subject that he could not talk about, look at, handle, and investigate, if it will bear public investigation. [Immense applause.] Remember the words of FELIX GRUNDY in the Senate of the United States: "In a time of war, if you abandon the Government and enlist under the enemy, you can be tried for treason." He also says, "If you stay at home and prejudice men's minds and prevent them from enlisting in the ranks, you commit a higher crime than going over to the enemy." He also states about those resisting the laws of Congress as being traitors to the nation. These remarks of Mr. GRUNDY would apply with force to the defamers of to-day against the present Administration. Then to all such men, let them know that war has been declared by the constituted authorities, and it is your duty to obey the mandates of the authorities. In 1862 there was an effort made to prejudice the minds of the people about the $300 exemption clause in the draft. Now that same Press which vilified that measure of the Government say it is all right. He had said to Mr. LINCOLN that he had better be wrong nine times out of ten than to have no policy in the affairs of the country. This remark he made while in the Senate. It was at the time when this proclamation was set aside and that proclamation was set aside. Mr. LINCOLN responded, "A policy is just what I do not want." Now he saw that the President was right. In a foreign war the President may go ahead of the people, but in a civil war let the people lead. Woe to the President that goes ahead of the people in a crisis like the present. Could you get a convention to say that it was not right to employ negroes in the army. He prophesied that Chicago would not do it. Suppose a colored regiment had been sent South a year ago—would not the very proposition to do so be hooted at? Now it is greeted with applause. So opinion changes with the progression of events. The Republican and Democratic parties are buried, and the question hereafter will be: "How did that man stand when Fort Sumter was attacked?" There are de facto two parties—Unionists and Disunionists. It remains with the Unionists to see that the ties of freedom are held strongly together. All other questions are minor to this one of liberty, for which the nation is contending. Let him put on record that President LINCOLN, for integrity, for uprightness of conduct, for fearless and independent action, and for a sincere desire to save this country, has no superior. [Immense applause.] As for Gov. JOHNSON, he had known him intimately for 21 years; it was his pleasure to serve with him in the Twenty-eighth Congress, and if he were to select a man of Roman iron will, unbending integrity, he knew of no man in the length and breadth of the country whom he considered superior to ANDREW JOHNSON. Always conciliatory, and yet pursuing a direct course; and from the hour when this rebellion commenced he has had but one object in view, and that is to save this country. [Great applause.]

"For right is right,
Since God is God,
And right will surely win.
To doubt would be disloyalty;
To falter would be sin."

SPEECH OF HON. HORACE MAYNARD.

HON. MR. MAYNARD was introduced as the patriot who had periled his life and lost his property in the rebellion, and who stood by his flag from the beginning till now. After the applause had subsided he spoke as follows:

FELLOW-CITIZENS OF NEW-YORK: The world certainly moves, and as certainly takes us along with it. I should have been exceedingly incredulous had any one four years ago ventured to predict that to-night I should be here in company with these two distinguished gentlemen that have just preceded me, discussing the propositions which they have so ably and intelligently addressed to your consideration to-night—one of them a member of the Republican party of that day of no mean name, and the other a distinguished member of the Democratic party—two parties, permit me to say, with which I had no affiliation, being exceedingly select and eclectic in my political views, and being of that highly respectable and eminently select body of gentlemen that four years ago cast their suffrages for Mr. BELL and Mr. EVERETT. [Laughter.] The condition of the country,—how changed and how unlike to what it was then! Then we could afford to scatter our forces and cast our votes according to our individual preferences, without very much consideration whether we were likely to win by the election of our candidates, or to do anything more than to give expression to the sentiments by which we were animated. We all feel that such is not the condition of the country at the present time. For we remember the three tremendous and significant words of the departed DOUGLAS, when he told us (and they were his testamentary declarations) that there could be now but two parties in the country—those that were for the Government and those that were against it—patriots on the one hand and traitors on the other. [Immense applause.] Those who are engaged in upholding the right arm of the Government in prosecuting the war for the maintenance of our flag have recently assembled in the city of Baltimore to nominate candidates for the Presidency and the Vice-Presidency during the next four years. Their action has passed into history, and we are met here to declare our sentiment upon it. Of our platform there is but one simple principle that pervades it—the preservation now and for all time of our national existence. Everything else is subordinate and matter-of-fact detail. The American people have settled the question; they have determined that the nation shall live at all hazards, and at any price. There was a time in the beginning of the contest when some might have done what was said of the rebellion, "back down" and give up—consent to annihilation. That day has passed. Too much money has been expended, and too much blood has been shed. This great Government has cost our fathers too much, and has cost us too much, that we can afford now to give it up. As a means of carrying on the contest, and as an incident growing out of it, the convention has decided that the institution of Slavery must perish. This is the first time in American history that statesmen and politicians have ventured in convention to touch that exceedingly delicate subject without an outburst of passion. The day when the "pet institution" might agitate the whole country, but no one might agitate it has passed. But when Slavery becomes the assailant, and made war upon the country, then the question was a very different one, and its defender turned around and declared that Slavery henceforth must be no longer. The convention have proposed the wisest and most prudent method of disposing of the whole question—amend the Constitution, extend the ordinance of 1787 all over the country, and let the divine institution disappear. [Applause.] It can even now be said that it has no legal existence outside of Kentucky and Delaware, and Kentucky, it seems, will have the honor to be the last Slave State in the Union. The question has been asked, what are you going to do with the negroes? I answer, nothing. I propose to amend the Constitution and give them the benefit of the habeas corpus, and let the subject stop there. Mr. LINCOLN trusted at first that the rebellion might be suppressed without interfering with it. I at that time interposed my voice and vote in opposition to any measure injuriously affecting my constituents. In company with Senator WILEY, of West Virginia, and Mr. CASEY, of Kentucky, and others, we waited on the President, and urged him to hold back his Proclamation of Jan. 1. Senator WILEY addressed him with credit and ability, and was answered in words of equal power and credit: "I have taken my stand and I cannot recede." [Immense applause.] I have lived to see that the President was right and that we were wrong. [Great applause.] When it was proposed to arm the negro, it was urged that he was a coward and would not fight. Port Hudson, Fort Wagner, Helena to Fort Pillow, and recently the banks of the James give the lie to the charge. On the other hand, it was urged that he would be vindictive and hard-hearted. That is equally without foundation. For three years we have prosecuted this war, steadily advancing. Our poor boys in the vanguard of the army have often been discouraged by a portion of the press traducing the cause and the Government. On the other hand, the hopes of the rebels have dwindled away one by one. The eloquent speaker then cited the declaration of ALEX. H. STEPHENS, that the division of the North and the cartridge-boxes of the South would effect the ends of the rebellion. The peace men who coöperate thus with the enemy work in what direction? Against the election of Mr. LINCOLN. That is the reason why all the Union loving men, the Stars-and-Stripes men that live in the rebellious States, that is the reason why they, without a dissenting voice, are for the reelection of Mr. LINCOLN, and would regard the election of anybody else as a concession made to the rebels. It has been intimated by the gentleman who preceded me that I should have a word to say in behalf of a fellow-citizen from my own State—Gov. JOHNSON—who has been honored with the nomination for the second place within the gift of the people. Standing here in New-York, in the presence of a member of the New-York delegation to Baltimore, I feel embarrassed for language to express the sentiments that I, in common with the loyal men of our State feel in consequence of this action, and especially that we feel to you, men of New-York, for we are aware that our candidate—for we came to Baltimore instructed by our constituents to present him as our candidate—had a formidable and most worthy competitor, before the convention, in one of your most eminent and most distinguished citizens. [Applause.] Fortunate was it that the country had two such men as DANIEL S. DICKINSON and ANDREW JOHNSON from which to select candidates for even the second office in our gift. [Applause.] JOHNSON and DICKINSON—DICKINSON and JOHNSON; one of whom stood in the citadel doing battle, keeping watch and ward over our liberties, while the other had stood in the fore front of the battle, in the face of the enemy—who had hung the banner upon the outer wall. [Great applause.] I hear some nice, sweetly-scented, aromatic gentleman, afraid of something unpleasant getting between the wind and his nobility, saying, and putting it forth in the columns of his newspaper by way of disparagement and derision of this distinguished man, "He won't do at all—great dishonor to our nation—he is a boorish tailor from the backwoods." [Laughter.] If Governor JOHNSON's friends refer to his early occupation and to the place of his residence as a matter of merit, and by the arts of the demagogue, claim popular favor upon them, that is one thing; and when his enemies seek to use this circumstance to his disparagement, and to bring him into odium and derision, it is quite another; [applause;] and I would suggest that this nice and refined, cultivated and elegant student of history refer to old BEN. FRANKLIN's blue stockings at the Court of Versailles, [laughter,] that he don't lose sight of old JOHN ADAMS, the schoolmaster, who wasn't good enough to marry the minister's daughter, and that he also remember the taunts and the jeers that used to be thrown out against ANDREW JACKSON, "Old Hickory;" what was said respecting his want of education and his humble origin, and the rather dubious and questionable occupations in his early career. [Applause.] These are all American citizens, reared under your Constitution and free Government, which makes some of us, at least, know what we say and mean what we say, when we declare this to be the best Government that the world has ever seen—a Government in which the son of the humblest peasant of Ireland or Albania may be, by the same force of his God-given talents, and by cultivation superadded, rise to a position beside the most noble, the most honored and the most useful. [Applause.] A Government like that is indeed worth fighting for. Those private matters, which go to make up the home-life of men, have very little to do with their fitness or unfitness for places of high popular trust. I might refer to him, in the way of gossip, as a kind husband and an indulgent father—as a temperate, studious, and most industrious man—but it is not for the possession or lack of these qualities that we select our great men, as many historical instances will demonstrate. I refer to his public career after he came to reside in our own State, in the place at which he was living when the war broke out, and where his home is now. Almost as soon as he was constitutionally eligible to office, his fellow-citizens of the county in which he lived selected him from the shop-board to represent them in our Legislature. Session after session was he thus employed, becoming a prominent and leading man in the State. He was a distinguished leader of the Democratic party; I was an undistinguished member of the Whig party. It was my business to study his weakness; it was my misfortune, in company with my party associates, sometimes to feel his strength. [Applause.] From the Legislature he was transferred to the halls of Congress, as you have been told, where he represented his district for ten years, leaving it in the Spring of 1853. Four years succeeding, by two successive elections, he was the Governor of the State of Tennessee. Following that, he took his seat in the Senate of the United States in the year 1857, and held it at the time the war broke out, and for nearly a year subsequent to that date, gentlemen, Gov. JOHNSON is an educated statesman; he graduates at the best schools of statesmanship that our country knows—our State Legislatures, the halls of the House of Representatives, and the floor of the American Senate. [Loud Applause.] Always successful, never defeated, elevated to no office except through the suffrages of the people he belongs to that class upon whom, both in private and in public affairs, it is always safe to rely. While a member of our State Legislature, the question of redistricting the State came before us, and he introduced a proposition to redistrict it upon what is called a white or free basis—that is to say, to take the political power and distribute on the basis of the white population, irrespective of the number of slaves, giving the political power to the non-slaveholding, rather than to the slaveholding portion of the State. [Great applause.] For this, as you will see if you will see if you will look back to the newspapers of that time, he was denounced by his companions as being untrue to the South, if not, in fact, a downright Abolitionist. When he entered Congress, he introduced and advocated for a period of more than ten years (for his advocacy continued after he left Congress) the measure known as the Homestead Bill; and whatever merit there may be in that policy, it is due to that statesman to say that he inaugurated and originated it in the House of Representatives. [Great applause.] It was afterward adopted by one of the great political parties of the country, and has now been adopted as the settled policy of the land. But it is not of these things, antecedent to the year 1860, that you wish me to speak; there has since that been a time that has tried mens' principles, and has determined what manner of spirit they are of. You are anxious to know how he has stood during this trial that has been upon the country. In the month of November, 1860, just after the Presidential election, when it became manifest that South Carolina was going to secede in her wild career of madness, he called a convention of his neighbors and friends at his own town, the town of Greenville, in Tennessee, and addressed them words of wisdom that have made its people true and unswerving in their allegiance to the Government from that day to this. [Applause.] On his return to the Senate he took an early occasion, within the first two weeks of the session, to address the Senate, and through the Senate the country, on this question, in which he took substantially the ground of Gen. JACKSON, in his declaration to South Carolina, that secession was treason, and that treason should be punished. [Applause.] It was during those debates that he uttered the remarkable words that you have seen recorded of him. Turning to JEFFERSON DAVIS and his fellow-traitors he said: "Were I the President, I would arrest you as traitors, I would try you as traitors, and I would hang you as traitors." [Loud and long-continued applause.] He remained in Washington at the special session of the Senate, until after the firing on Fort Sumter. On his way home, passing over the subsequent battle-field of Manassas, through the town of Lynchburgh, and onward to his home, he was beset by an armed mob in the town of Lynchburgh, and met it single-handed and alone, and met it successfully. [Applause.] Going home, he immediately took the field, and addressed his fellow-citizens of the eastern portion of Tennessee, going from county seat to county-seat, through roads that were infested, and beset with open and secret enemies. On one occasion at the town of Huntsville, in the month of May, he was encountered by one of our judges then upon the bench, of dawning rebel sympathies, and subsequently a member of the Rebel Senate, who intimated to him that he (Gov. JOHNSON) was a traitor to the South. The Governor, turning to him in a manner that will never be forgotten by those who were present, said: "Sir, the time will come in Tennessee when we shall have Judges who will declare the law, and who will define treason and punish it." That time, gentlemen, has about come. [Applause.] Our courts are in session, our grand juries are busy, and the result of their deliberations the patriotic people of the country will know in time, and over which, when they know, they will rejoice. [Applause.]

Mr. MAYNARD dwelt at some length on other aspects of the campaign, particularly with reference to loyal people of the South, and concluded by thanking the audience for the attention with which they had listened to him.

Hon. S. MATTHEWS, of Baltimore, was the next speaker introduced. The lateness of the hour prevents more than reference to a most eloquent and humorous speech, which elicited enthusiasm and mirth. His appeal to the women of the North to act for the Union with the earnestness and devotion with which those of the South acted for secession was electric, and his call to the loyal men to unite in defending their best and dearest interests, and preserve the Union to themselves and to their posterity, was responded to with wildest applause. He concluded amid the enthusiasm he had created, and the meeting adjourned.

THE WAR IN TENNESSEE.

Further Particulars of the Defeat of Sturgis—Fourteen Pieces of Artillery Lost—Our Loss Less than One Thousand—Desperate Fighting of the Troops.

ST. LOUIS, Wednesday, June 15.

Memphis advices of the 13th contain further accounts of the engagement near Guntown, Miss. The troops comprising the expedition were two brigades of cavalry under Gen. GRIERSON, two brigades of infantry, one company of the First Illinois Light Artillery, and two regiments of colored infantry, all under command of Gen. STURGIS. Citizens report KIRBY SMITH in command of the enemy, assisted by FORREST, RODDY, and LEE. FORREST is said to have started his entire command for Georgia, but recalled them upon learning of the advance of our forces.

Our troops are said to have fought with desperate valor, but of eighteen pieces of artillery four only were brought off. About one hundred wagons were taken, and the greater portion of our wounded fell into the hands of the enemy's cavalry, who pursued our forces to Colliersville. The enemy's loss is supposed to be considerable, though not so large as ours. We have no definite information in regard to casualties.

Col. HUMPHREY, of the Ninety-fifth Illinois, is reported killed. Col. WARING, of the Fourth Missouri, was severely wounded.

FURTHER PARTICULARS.

MEMPHIS, Tuesday, June 14.

Considerable bodies of the missing infantry of Gen. STURGIS' expedition are constantly coming in, and our loss will probably be cut down to less than 1,000, all told. By to-night the casualties will be pretty accurately reported.

Some of the officers blame Gen. STURGIS, and say his management was bad. This will probably be investigated. All concur in stating that the men fought with desperation, the negro troops especially; but they fell into confusion, and their ammunition becoming exhausted, caused a panic.

It is reported that the rebel force which STURGIS encountered was en route to JOHNSTON's army, when they received information of the fitting out of this expedition, and turned about to defeat it.

Advices from the northern border of Arkansas represent the same state of affairs, the country being entirely destitute of provisions and forage.

SHELBY and command are reported at Batesville, en route for Missouri, on a raid.

Gen. SICKLES and staff arrived at Little Rock on the 5th. He left for Vicksburgh on the 10th.

The reported capture and butchery of a refugee train, which left Batesville on the evacuation of our troops, (mention of which had been made, and since contradicted,) is reaffirmed by parties who arrived here direct from Batesville. Seventy men and four women were slaughtered, and the remaining women and children left on the road in a helpless condition, and treated in the most cruel and barbarous manner.

FRIENDSHIP TRUE.

Yes, I am your firm friend, I have shown it for years,
I have shown it in sorrow, joy, laughter and tears;
I would stand by you yet to the cannon-mouthed death.
But, oh! ask me no longer to stand by your breath!

It is cruel to ask it! the Lord himself knows
You are life to my spirit, but death to my nose!
Oh! Tom, even now if no remedy shone,
I would stick by you still and still call you my own!

But there is a sure remedy close at your hand
That is sweetening a million of breaths in the land;
For it cleanses and strengthens the Teeth, so the mouth
Seems an ivory gate to the rose of the South!

"And that remedy's name—SOZODONT—will you take?"
"Yes, I will, my old friend, for your own darling sake!
So, here's off for that exquisite breath of the rose!
Hip, hurrah for my mouth and hurrah for your nose!
